After the debate the judges, Quarles, Chenoweth and Lemon were served a delicious lunch prepared by the Home Ec. class under the supervision of Miss Button.

Work has been received from League Head Quarters that the next debate will take place November 21 at the Charlevoix Gymnasium with Onaway the opponents.

Charlevoix again will take the affirmative side of the question. The affirmative debaters will represent Charlevoix are Daisy Butcher, Dorothy Staley and Charles Collier.

FARM WORLD SENDS BEST TO THE CHICAGO STOCK SHOW

Heavy entries in all departments of the nation's premier livestock show, the International Live Stock Exposition, are reported by Secretary-manager B. H. Heide.

Every one of the 20 acres of buildings that comprise the permanent home of this nonprofit agricultural show at the Chicago Stock Yards, will be crowded with the finest products that farmers and livestock breeders of this nation and others produce. As in past years, the exposition will open on the first Saturday after Thanksgiving, November 29 and will extend through to the following Saturday, December 6.

Indicative of the wide area from which entries have been received for the coming show, Heide cites several of the leading breeds of beef cattle that will be on view. In the contingent of the Angus breed, herein will meet the Chicago feeds as far separate as Washington and New York; the Shorthorns will come from a distance, points as those and California; and the Herefords from Wisconsin to West Virginia. Sheep will be represented by show flocks from Vermont to Wyoming, saving from Minnesota to Florida, and horses from Saskatchewan to Maryland. The International recently became an annual contest of "clearing house" from which emerge the champions of the day.

Forty-seven of the world's leading livestock judges are outlined to pass upon these choice animals. The management announces that eleven fat-stock shows, 16 state fairs and two foreign countries have been drawn upon to furnish the judicial talent. Canada will send two judges, and three more will come from Scotland to act in this capacity.

The International Live Stock Exposition, in its geographic position, its permanency situated in the heart of the industrial and farm capital of the country, and in its calendar position, at the close of the American round of agricultural show season, each year every other state is giving reverent attents to it exhibits and visitors heartfelt thanks to Almighty God for from every part of the continent where farming is if importance, and this justifies the name that has been given it, "The Supreme Court of the Agricultural World."

All the railroads entering Chicago are offering reduced round-trip fares for the week of the exposition, and in a number of states special trains are being organized.

PULMOTOR USED TO SAVE FISH FROM DROWNING

The pulmotor, that modern invention which every year saves thousands of persons from death by suffocation, has now traveled from hospital and fire-line into an entirely different element. An apparatus involving the pulmotor idea is annually saving millions of fish from the same fate, according to reports received by officials of the American Game Protective Association.

The rescuing of streams and lakes with low ground water is the task which most states maintain today can always accomplished shipping them in tanks of water, officials said.

Even when this was done by truck with the greatest possible speed and over comparatively short distances, they reported, a large percentage of the fish died en route. The air supplied just when the tanks were often so weakened their growth was checked.

When liftoxsutanised oxygen had been liberated from the water the fish literally suffocated in their own element.

Today several states have already installed one of the newest things in conservation equipment to prevent the tragedy from being repeated.

This is a tank truck provided with an oxygen-feed similar to that of a pulmotor. The operator adds oxygen into the tanks as fast as the fish breathe it from the water. The supply is controlled by the driver in accordance with the number of fish, their size and even the species.

With this truck, the Idaho game and fish department distributed 11,000,000 fingerlings last this year with almost no loss, officials of the Association learned.

THANKSGIVING DAY PROCLAMATION

"Let never day nor night unhallowed pass,
But still remember what the Lord hath done."

More than three centuries ago Governor Bradford of the Plymouth Colony appointed a day for public prayer and praise, to the end that Thanksgiving day has most properly all of His mercies and blessings.

We have passed through a year of business and industrial stagnation with its attendant discomforts but out of it should come a manifest strengthening. We have many problems to solve but the good sense of the American people has always been equal to their solution. Every one of us is charged with a civic obligation of how we can best serve our kindred and thus restore industry to its normal condition and give more gainful employment to our agricultural producers.

Our achievements of the past provide cheer and inspiration with which to look hopefully to the future. Above all the circumstances there exists a confidence that, having earnestly dedicated our efforts to the task, we shall build a fuller and more prosperous state and nation.

It is therefore, eminently fitting that the people of Michigan, on Nov. 27, shall by set aside as a special day for Thanksgiving, a day for all the people of this Commonwealth to observe in thanksgiving and prayer that our gracious nation, under the wise direction of our President, may go forward unswervingly as the leader of the world.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of the State, this seventeenth day of November in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirty, and of the Commonwealth the ninety-fourth.

FRED W. GREEN,
By the Governor: Governor.
JOHN S. HAGGERTY,

No. 10

The disaster to the dock in no way discouraged the enterprising men who had, so far, conducted the enterprise. Instead of giving up the gun, as some feared they would when the result of the storm was known, they went to the lumber and other materials for the erection of a store, and in a few days it was up in good and well filled with goods.

Early in the spring of '65 changes were repaired and the dock completed. The firm prospered to out as their dock was the only of Northern Transportation Co.'s boats.

Early in May the machinery and material for the erection of a sawmill were landed at the river, and the people were led to believe that a ... lot that was much felt was about to be supplied, but they were doomed to be disappointed. The owners of the mill machinery did not arrive until the middle of August and business was not commenced until September. The mills that had been abandoned by Mr. Van Pelt were repaired, a case of newly timber was thrown across the creek, and a pulp machine was put in operation. The making of December, when work was suspended until the following spring.

When a log opened and the water through the mill was closed and the attempt made to raise the water, it was discovered that the dam was not worth a ... being the substantial manner in which it was built, it was not adapted to the sandy foundation on which it was erected.

Three times during the summer it was repaired, and as many times swept away, each time draining the pond and the pockets of the unfortunate proprietor, until he was obliged to abandon the prospect and resort to his summer and lodge as a means of obtaining his pickings and grub.

During the summer and fall of '65 the Duck Company erected their boarding house and barn, and Rich, Philo Beers built one part of the log his present residence. Mr. Van Riper erected the upright part of the house now occupied by Nelson Anstiss, Esq.

1866 passed off without any very marked improvement in the village, though several new comers had settled at various points around the lake, but the spring of '67 opened with brighter prospects. The firm of A. Fox & Co. had made a contract with a firm in Buffalo, N. Y., to build a tug for use on Pine Lake in towing their wood from the different points around the lake to their dock. In anticipation of her coming they early commenced the work of clearing out the river and constructing a railroad from their wood yard on the river to their dock. They also had four sawes built at Northport for the wood trade of Pine Lake.

Some time during the month of June their tug arrived and an attempt was made to lock her against the current, but the undertaking proved a failure; the more they worked her the firmer the became imbedded in the gravel. Ways were then laid over the bank where the present channel is, over which, in the course of a few days, she was successfully launched into the river. In a short time steam was up and the whistle of the Little Fanville was echoing across the lakes, to the joy and delight of the inhabitants.

The next thing was to make a passage to Pine Lake which was accomplished previous to the 4th of July and on the morning of that memorable day the waters of Pine Lake were for the first time plowed by the prow of a steamer.

That fall, among the arrivals at the River, was one Dr. Pinnen, who came, as he said, to locate as a permanent resident of the place, with the intention of practicing his profession. And he did practice; but whether his profession was an M. D. or a sharper, let those who paid him their cash for the LaCrosse Democrat tell. The fact is he got their money, and they are not to get their papers. We think, on the whole, he was well-named Pinnin.

The same fall Messrs. Redington, Nelson & Co. came to look for a location for their mill. There was some talk of buying the interest of Fox & Rose in the dock, but not agreeing on the terms they left, but not until they had made a conditional bargain for the present site of their mill. All that winter the place was full of rumors about their intentions. Tom had heard from Traverse City that they did not intend to come, while Dick and Harry heard from some one in Northport that the firm had dissolved, and the prospect was "knocked in the head." But notwithstanding one Sunday morning in the month of May, 1868, the Maple Leaf arrived with the mill and all appurtenances thereto belonging. Work was immediately commenced not only on the mill but in the woods and long before winter had set in several cargoes of lumber had been shipped and the mill had become a permanent institution.

The same summer saw their regular attorney settle in the north-up, in the person of E. H. Green, Esq. He was also engaged in the erection of his neat little cottage, and seemed to be in an unusual hurry to get it completed. The fact is, he was contemplating matrimony, and his mind was verging upon hymen. This fall he was again favored with another resident in Mr. H., in the person of one Gilbert, who practiced here a month or two and then removed to Elk Rapids where in a short time he Fractured.

The summer of 1868 saw quite an improvement in the village—several dwellings and Wm. Lanfert's store. 1869 was an eventful year in the of the principal events was the establishment of a newspaper on the place April 24th the first number of the Charlevoix was issued by E. H. Green, editor and published by Willard A. Smith for H. C. Leach. To say that it has been ably edited and neatly printed would be but doing it justice.

The next event was the organization of Charlevoix county, which was fully consummated at the election in the fall. Bridges of Hollby Tiff Store or W. C. Bellinger 29-42

So much for the improvements of 1869, and now for the arrivals. The principal arrivals were the family of Wm. Nelson, of the firm of Redington, Nelson & Co., and Dr. Lewis. The only other arrival during the past summer was Henry Morgan and family, and the first business they exercise were the sawing of the mew Maple Leaf and the schooner Wm. Bone from the lakes.

And for what is to come Shall it not be written and told in the Scriptures of when we have made such a feeble attempt to tell what has been done in the past, and recorded, Mormon fault-finders and Gentile quiffers.

The Tragedy of Tuesday Evening

Probably before the time of our readers receive this paper there were aware of the melancholy death of our respected citizen Seth F. Mason, Esq., on Tuesday night of this week. It is well known that a heavy westerly wind had been blowing during the day, and by evening the sea was running high and the storm unabated. About 6:00 p. m. several persons were startled by hearing shouts from the vicinity of the dock and the appalling truth soon became evident that some person had been wrecked and was at the mercy of the elements. A crowd soon found their way to the dock where a fearful sight met their gaze. Within a short distance of the pier, on the north side, a human form was seen clinging to a capsized boat. The spars being fast to the bottom, the breakers swept entirely over the unfortunate man, threatening to whirl him into the angry element. Thanks to the presence of mind of several persons, a rescue was effected which was through him, which he made fast to his body, and he was hauled from his perilous position, and hoisted in safety to the dock. He stated that the boat was the Sentinel, and that her owner, Seth F. Mason was drowned. He proved to be a son of John G. Mason, of this place. He had taken passage with Mr. Mason at Elk Rapids for Pine River. The storm increased in violence as they came. By the time they had reached the West Point light their situation became critical—the boat nearly swamped in the breakers while rounding the point. They reached the vicinity of the river, however, and the same reason as known to the surveyors Mr. Mason lowered the mainsail, and the boat immediately capsized. They both scrambled upon the bottom of the boat, which had, in the meantime, drifted under the dock, but a sea struck over the boat, carrying Mr. Mason with it, and he was seen no more. While near the dock young Manny succeeded in climbing up the pile, nearly to the plank, but being so much exposure was forced to relinquish his hold, and he swam again to the boat, which had, in the meantime, drifted to the north side of the pier, where he was found when rescued. The body of Mr. Mason was found Tuesday morning upon the beach near the point about a mile north of this place. Two severe bruises were found over the eye, which, according to the opinion expressed by Dr. Lewis at the inquest, were received before death, and while under the dock which accounts for his sudden disappearance. Mr. Mason was one of the pioneers of the county, and was a man universally esteemed. He leaves a wife and nine children, who have our warmest sympathies in their bereavement. The funeral took place Wednesday afternoon, and was largely attended yesterday afternoon

Obituary

No casualty has sent a thrill of sorrow to so many hearts in this vicinity as the sudden death of our esteemed fellow-citizen, Seth F. Mason.

He was born on the 24th of April, 1820, in the Town of Deerfield, Portage County, Ohio, and consequently was aged 50 years, 6 months, and 21 days. About the year 1846 he moved to A Sodus River, in Lenox County, Mich., where he entered into partnership with J. G. Stockman in the fishing business. In 1848 he was married to Miss Eliza A. Stockman, and subsequently moved across Saginaw Bay to Point Au Barques, in Huron County, Michigan, where he continued to reside until the 18th day of October, 1857, when he, with his family, Morris J. Stockman and wife, sailed for Pine River at which place they safely arrived on the 20th of the same month, and have continued to reside here since then.

For the last ten years he was chiefly engaged in agricultural pursuits. He was also a skillful mechanic, and since residing here has built a number of sail boats, which are named as follows, to-wit: Rocket, Hawk, Meteor, Night Hawk, Union Jack, Daughter, Bertie Mae, Velocipede, and Sentinel.

In the circumstances relating to his death we give the following extract from the verdict of the jury: "That Mr. Mason came to his death on the 15th day of November, 1870, between the hours of 6 and 8 in the afternoon of said day, in the waters of Lake Michigan, near the mouth of Pine River, in said County of Charlevoix, that he was then and there sailing in his own boat, in company with Wallace Manny, endeavoring to enter the mouth of said Pine river, and it happened accidentally and by misfortune that the said boat was overturned by the high said sea; and after clinging to the boat for a time, the said Seth F. Mason was, by force of the sea and waves, forcibly washed from the said boat, and suffocated and drowned; and then and there by such suffocation died; and on the jurors aforesaid do say that the said Seth F. Mason, in manner and by the means aforesaid, accidentally, casually, and by misfortune came to his death, and not otherwise."

In the community Mr. Mason was always regarded by all who knew him as an honest, benevolent, an enterprising citizen. He was a very affectionate and indulgent father, a kind and generous husband. He leaves a wife and nine children to mourn his loss, a large circle of relatives and friends who warmly sympathize are with the bereaved family.

The funeral took place yesterday at one o'clock p. m. The religious services were conducted by the Rev. W. Barrett, who chose for his text the following words: "He hath done all things well."

We are always pleased to have our friends visit us. We would be doubly pleased if certain of them would "squirt" tobacco juice less promiscuously, and keep their fingers off the type and out of the cases while in the office.

OUR BUSINESS HOUSES

A Chapter Descriptive to the Business Establishments of Charlevoix —Their Birth and Growth.

From the one solitary and diminutive store which supplied the wants of Charlevoix people in 1869, where the Sentinel first saw light, the number has increased to eighteen prosperous places of business. No better or positive indication of the future prosperity of Charlevoix can be pointed out than what the enterprise of our limmenen men has done in the past, and is doing now, in the way of enlargement and solid establishment. We purpose briefly taking our readers up and down our business streets, and stepping into each place of business beginning with

FOX, ROSE & BUTTARS
General Merchandise

During the autumn of 1866, the store building now occupied by Fox, Rose & Buttars was built. It was not occupied until July of the following year, when the mercantile business of A. Fox & Co. who occupied the old store on the north side, was transferred to it, under the firm name of A. Buttars & Co. Mr. Buttars coming from Northport and assuming the management of the establishment. Mr. Buttars transcribed the energy of his nature into the new concern, and its business grew apace. In July, 1872 Mr. Buttars was admitted as a full partner, and the firm name changed to Fox, Rose & Buttars. The business of the house multiplied rapidly, rendering necessary the enlargement of their warehouses, and recently the establishment has extended itself to the old "Fox Hall," above their store, where their large stock of clothing and hats and caps is displayed. Their business was about six years ago, extended by the establishment of a branch store at Petoskey, which has developed into equal proportions with the mother house. Mr. Buttars also has the personal management of that establishment, spending two days in the week at Petoskey. Mr. Stockman's business enlarged rapidly and he continued to increase until its magnitude demanded more room, when last spring he commenced the erection of the fine brick store which he now occupies, and which we have lately described. We doubt if another such an establishment can be found within one hundred miles of Charlevoix. Mr. Stockman deals in every variety of hardware and has constantly on hand a complete stock. Trunshop, which is managed by Mr. Wm. Kanagy, of Banks, a tinsmith of large experience. Mr. Stockman is twinbirds owner of the store, our Gazette and has large property in Charlevoix county.

BYRON SEE
General Merchandise

Byron See, formerly a farmer in Wisconsin, came to Charlevoix the spring of 1872. In August of that year, with limited capital, he went to Milwaukee and purchased a small stock of groceries and provisions, renting as a store the front room of the old Chamberlain building on the corner of Bridge and Clinton streets. He soon after erected a small store building on the same street, and by his tact, energy and business methods, fitted himself for the line of our business men. His trade increased to correspond with surrounding development, when, in the fall of 1876, O. S. Washburn purchased a half interest in the business, and the stock was increased largely, dry goods being added to their trade. See & Washburn enjoyed a prosperous, and growing trade until, in February, 1879, Mr. See purchased Mr. Washburn's interest, and until now has continued sole proprietor of the business. Last year Mr. See heightened his store building to meet the growing trade, and with an eye to the future, he has purchased the lot on the corner of Bridge and Main streets, upon which next spring he will erect a fine brick store. The location is one of the best in town. Mr. See has been three times elected Treasurer of Charlevoix County, and his business and official record stand high.

LEWIS & ACKERT
Druggists & Grocers

From 1865 until his death, in the spring of 1872, Philo Beers conducted a limited drug business in what is now known as the old "Beers Homestead." At his death Levi Lewis purchased the stock and erected a small store adjoining his residence on Clinton street. Two years later he moved the building to Bridge street, and enlarged it as well as increasing his stock. In the meantime Dr. Lewis continued in the practice of his profession, fast assumer finding demands in his trade, he purchased of the Beers estate the very superior building now occupied by Lewis & Ackert, and commenced the erection of the new store. When completed, the doctor formed a partnership with John M. Ackert, and the business was extended to embrace groceries and provisions, of which commodities together with a large stock of drugs, the firm carry a good stock. Their trade is increasing and the firm appear to be prospering Dr. Lewis has a good medical practice.

The Stone.—The oldest inhabitant' racks his brain trying to remember when he has witnessed such a "spell of weather" as we have been enjoying for the past few days. For twelve consecutive days snow has been falling and as we write it still snows. The snow is fully three feet deep on a level, with good prospects for more soon. Saturday afternoon, as was predicted by the signal service, a west wind of terrific fury commenced, and continued until Sunday night. The wind was cold and cutting, and full of snow, making it impossible to face it any considerable distance. The roads are full, and fences covered. Charlevoix will not be favored by visits from our country cousins until shovels are freely used.

Friday afternoon, when the storm had nearly reached its height, and an object was unrecognizable at the south of a street, a vessel came cruising into the river with the aid and of tug of friendly whistle. It proved to be the schooner Sea Gem. She passed the Manitous early that morning, and from there Capt. Smith saw no land until he struck Charlevoix harbor. For good reasoning and good luck combined this takes the premium. Capt. Smith must carry two horseshoes on his forward timber head. (Reference to T. D. Smith)

Prof Arthur Nelson has decided to produce the cantata of "Esther" this coming winter, and already the leading characters have been assigned. It will include all the local vocal talent, and promises to be the musical event of the winter. Prof. Nelson has had experience with "Esther," and he must be better qualified to direct in this class of productions.

The Fish Output

Fishermen complain that the catch this season is only about two-thirds as large as last, yet the daily shipments from the several docks reach, in the aggregate, about seven tons per day, mostly trout.

Three tugs operate here, and constitute the main source of the catch—the Ampach, C. Gothery, the Minnie Warren, John O'Neill; and the Rawson, by Carter & Co. Hugh Donnelly sends in a respectable catch from his pound—but the only one in operation here. Howard, Jacobs & Co. operate an outfit from Little Island, and other sailboat fish are run by Pat O'Neill, Martin & Graves (north point), Charles Blanchard and Wm. M. Miller & Co., Traverse & Tallon, Wm. Collins and Eugene Crean.

Some of the catch is shipped to Beach & Co., Chicago, but Constable & Sons, of Petoskey handle most of it.

Fishing will continue as long as the lake remains open, which will carry them into January.

At Petoskey, Constable & Sons are running four tugs and average a daily catch of ten tons.

The Government is on the lookout for ways to simplify problems for mothers. Self-help garments have been recently inspected and considered by the Bureau of Home Economics with an eye to making it possible for the little folks to dress themselves.

Self-help clothes for youngsters mean self-help inevitably for mothers. Little undergarments made for example of cotton which hold their shape, and keep their soft luster after many washings will help busy mothers just as two buttons instead of four help baby fingers trying to master the intricacies of fashion.

But the mutual help program works both ways. For example many a mother wants her children to learn to assume themselves responsibilities that the premises have given her more time for other duties. Actually it does much more than this. The child who has learned to "make things" with his own hands, to use its imagination in inventive play, has a much better start toward finding interesting happiness without external artificial stimulus and "thought" entertainment. Incidentally the child that is trained early becomes a "self-starter" in this highly competitive and initiative demanding world.

REALLY, a strong pipe is no joke. The next time you attend a Legion or a lodge meeting or a banquet, let the mild fragrance of Sir Walter's favorite smoking mixture precede you and assure a cordial reception. Sir Walter works mild magic with strong pipes—it's uniformly well aged, mellow and bitefess and noiseless smoke. It burns freely and evenly, and it's cool and sweet down to the last flake in the bowl.

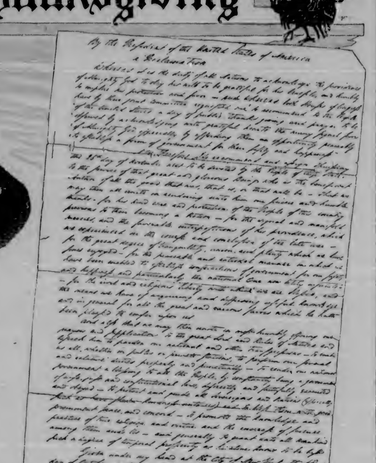
They Helped Establish Thanksgiving



By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

PRESIDENT HOOVER has issued the annual proclamation calling upon all Americans to set aside Thursday, November 27, as Thanksgiving day to be observed in a spirit of gratitude for the blessings which have been bestowed upon them during the past year. In doing this he followed a precedent established 162½ ago which has been observed by every President since that time.

Although the annual designation by Presidential proclamation of the last Thursday in November as Thanksgiving day was started by Abraham Lincoln in 1863, there were four other Presidents who had a prominent part in establishing this custom, one of them was George Washington and the other was James Madison.

For it was George Washington, our first Presidents, who issued the first Presidential Thanksgiving proclamation—which incidentally was the first proclamation of any sort from the hands of any supreme executive—at any time in the history of the United States.

This first proclamation was issued in response to a joint resolution of the first congress and, oddly enough, it was discussed in the house of representatives and precipitated a lively debate in that chamber. On Friday, September 26, 1789, Elias Boudinot of New Jersey, who had been prominent in the Continental congress, took the floor of the house and said that he thought it but little at variance with the sentiments of the people to afford an opportunity to all the citizens of the United States to join, with one voice, in returning to Almighty God their sincere thanks for the many blessings he had granted them since the adoption of the present form of government.

Boudinot, therefore, proposed the following joint resolution:

"Resolved, That a joint committee of both Houses be directed to wait upon the President of the United States, to request that he would recommend to the people of the United States a day of public thanksgiving and prayer, to be observed by acknowledging, with grateful hearts, the many signal favors of Almighty God, especially by affording them an opportunity peaceably to establish a constitution of government for their safety and happiness."

This started the debate, the principal account of which only is furnished by the Annals. "Mr. Burke," the Annals report, "did not like this coupling of Thursgiven coupling it with the name of Thanksgiving. (This was Aedanus Burke, Irishman of Irish parents, a barrister at law frequently sent "to Coventry" for the same event, though to one it was a victory and to the other a defeat).

Mr. Boudinot was sorry to hear arguments drawn from the bleak of a cloudy day against the use of it. He hoped no gentleman would entertain a serious opposition to a measure both proper and just.

"Mr. Tucker (Thomas Tudor Tucker, Federalist, also of South Carolina) thought the House had no business in Interfere in a matter which did not concern them. What could the President direct the people to do what, perhaps, they have no mind to do? They may not be inclined to return thanks for a constitution with they have experienced that it promotes their safety and happiness.

"We do not yet know but they may have reason to be dissatisfied with the efficacy it has already produced; but whether this be so or not, it is a business with which Congress have nothing to do. It is a ridiculous matter and, as such, is productive to us. If a day of thanksgiving were take place, let it be done by the authority of the several states; they know best what causes their constituents have to be pleased with the establishment of this Constitution.

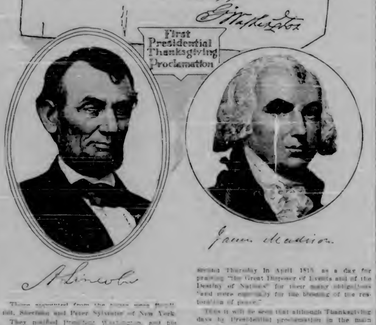
"Mr. Sherman (Roger Sherman of Connecticut) justified the practice of thanksgiving on any usual event, and also as a laudable one in itself, but as according to a number of precedents in Holy Writ, for instance, the solemn thanksgivings and rejoicings which took place at the time of Solomon, after the building of the temple, was a case in point. This example he thought worthy of Christian imitation on the present occasion; and he would agree with the gentlemen who moved the resolution.

"Mr. Boudinot quoted further precedents from the practice of the late congress and hoped the motion would meet a ready acquiescence."

With this the question went through. It was received in the senate September 26, the next day, and disposed of as follows:

"Resolved, that the Senate do concur in the above recited resolution, and that Messrs. (William S.) Johnston (of Connecticut) and (Charles) Izard (of South Carolina) be the committee on the part of the Senate."

First Presidential Thanksgiving Proclamation



Three successive years the winner were Scottish, Siberian and Peter Sylvester of New York.

They received President Washington and his proclamation was issued in New York, October 3.

Even after the proclamation was issued it. Experienced well for more than 150 years six months were unknown. In 1815 it was advertised for sale with impressions other patriotic messengers by a New York city art gallery and it was proclaimed for the sale of 1890, a small price for half an dozen copies of it. Finally, in 1863, a substantial effort of the President of messengers of the Library of Congress.

Mr. Finnerich found that it had every testimonies of being issued to mark the original first Thanksgiving proclamation. It was advertised to be so. The paper had been in a former but not covered with glass and appeared had given it a grimy appearance. Otherwise it was well preserved, plainly legible, if little worn. The handwriting of the document itself in that of Washington Jackson, according to Mr. Finnerich. Jackson was Washington's secretary, and had been secretary to the Constitutional convention in 1787.

During his second administration, Washington issued a Thanksgiving proclamation, on January 1, 1795, at Philadelphia, which was then the National Capital, he called upon his fellow-americans to "recognize and observe Thursday, the 19th day of February next as a day of public thanksgiving and prayer, on that day to meet together and render their sincere and hearty thanks to the Great Ruler of Nations for a long list of blessings which the country was then enjoying.

The example set by Washington was followed by his successor, John Adams who proclaimed two Thanksgiving days during his administration—one on Wednesday, May 9, 1798, and the other on Thursday, April 25, 1799. One curious thing about Adams' proclamations was that the two terms of Thomas Jefferson, but it was restored to favor by James Madison who issued four such proclamations during his administration. The first three were more or a day of "public humiliation and prayer" because of the nation's intentions in the form of the second war with England, but the fourth was a day of real Thanksgiving that came, had come at last. All of these proclamations were issued in response to a joint resolution from the senate and house of representatives. The first set aside the third Thursday in August of 1815, the second named the second Thursday in September, 1815, as the day; the third designated Thursday, January 12, 1816, and the fourth, issued soon after the treaty of peace with England was proclaimed, called upon the American people to set aside the second Thursday in April 1815, as a day for praising "the Great Disposer of Events and of the Destiny of Nations" for their many unmerited and were especially for the blessing of the restoration of peace.

There is still to seen that although Thanksgiving day is a Presidential proclamation it is the fixed upon Thursday as the day of the week for such an observance, the month varied greatly and those was for the period between those Thanksgiving days and the annual observance established by the Pilgrims. No other Presidents after Washington seemed to have had occasion for proclaiming a Thanksgiving day had it remained for Abraham Lincoln to resume the custom and to link up the proclaimed Thanksgiving day with the Pilgrim custom in establishing the last Thursday in November as a national day for giving thanks.

The first Lincoln proclamation appointing a day for divine supplication was dated August 12, 1861. It designated the last Thursday in September as "a day of humiliation, prayer and fasting." Things did not look especially bright for the Northern arms just then. The invasion of Bull Run was still fresh. Perhaps in this fact may be ascribed the patriotic wording of the document:

"It is true, when our own beloved country, once the theatre of most united prosperous and happy, is now afflicted with famine and civil war, it is peculiarly fit for us to recognize the hand of God in this terrible visitation, and to unite in penitence of our own sins and crimes as a nation and as individuals. It is meet, therefore, that we should bow down and to pray for His mercy."

Thousands of individuals throughout the land offered up food and prayer for the national deliverance.

The regular Thanksgiving in November, 1863, was a rather subdued occasion. There had been no Presidential proclamation. In 1862 there was no proclamation, either.

The memorable year of 1863 brought, however, three proclamations. The first was dated March 3 and designated April 30 as a day of fasting and prayer. July 15 another was issued, setting August 6 as a day to give thanks in the conquest of peace. On October 3 came the first of Lincoln's three Thanksgiving proclamations. This outlook for the Union was lovely. "And so . . . the last Thursday in November is hereby set apart as a day of thanksgiving and prayer."

July 7, 1864, by direction of congress President Lincoln designated the first Thursday of August as "a day of national humiliation and prayer."

October 20 of the same year saw the issuance of Lincoln's second and last regular Thanksgiving day proclamation. Before Thanksgiving day arrived it was known that Lincoln, by an overwhelming majority, had been chosen to succeed himself. The war was drawing to a close and the occasion was auspicious.

Gigantic Strides Made in Use of Esperanto

Esperanto was created by Dr. L. L. Zamenhof (1859-1917), who was born at Bialystock, Russia. He believed that, should international economic stimulus might be removed if a common language were available, and he conceived the idea of Esperanto. By the age of thirteen, he had completed the construction of his new language, but it was then subjected to severely and practical tests till 1887, when he published his "Lingvo Internacio" under the pseudonym of "Doctor Esperanto." Since that time the use of Esperanto has spread rapidly, and thousands nonetheless now learn Esperanto in every country. Even in the British Isles, where the supremacy of the movement does not appear to have been fully understood, there are supposed to be ten thousand persons with a knowledge of the language. The third universal Esperanto congress was held at Cambridge in 1907, and more than 1,250,000 textbooks have been sold to those students. More than 12,000 delegates representing every nationality in the world, attended the recent eleventh universal Esperanto congress at Oxford. Among those were a number of Indonesians.

THE SWANK ABOUT-TOWN FROCK; FAVOR VELVET FOR AFTERNOON

A Swank About-Town Frock.

ACCORDING to modern psychology of dress, it is merely practical to see enough of the world to get an idea of what to get in shopping, or should lovers of the fair sex, in general, be content with a mere glimpse of the world as viewed through the windows of a limousine? Still another question is, should one depend upon one's own taste in selecting one's apparel, or should one be guided entirely by the mode as set forth by the arbiters of fashion? Perhaps the best answer to the latter question is that one should be guided by the mode to a certain extent, but not entirely. Also, one should not be a slave to fashion, but should adapt the mode to one's own individuality.

In these days there are many types of costume from which to choose, and the woman who is not well informed as to the requirements of her particular type of beauty is apt to be at a disadvantage. Take, for instance, the matter of afternoon dress. Many women who have not the time to devote to the study of the subject are apt to choose a frock that is not at all suitable to their type of beauty. Then, too, there is the question of the occasion for which the frock is to be worn. Many women who have not the time to devote to the study of the subject are apt to choose a frock that is not at all suitable to their type of beauty. Then, too, there is the question of the occasion for which the frock is to be worn.

Velvet is the favorite material for afternoon dresses this season, and the model pictured above is a charming example of the use of this fabric. The dress is of black velvet, with a bodice of white satin. The skirt is cut in circular fashion, and is very full. The bodice is cut low in front, and has a deep V-shaped opening. The sleeves are short, and are trimmed with a band of white satin. The dress is fastened in front with a row of small buttons. The skirt is trimmed with a band of white satin at the bottom. The dress is completed with a white satin sash, which is tied in a bow at the back.

Two Models for Afternoon.

time of year silk. In this instance it is used in navy blue pleated in hockey stitch knife pleats.

Satin, velvet and satin combined are effective in the use of velvet and satin in the same costume. The contrast between the lustrous satin and the velvet appeals to many of the chic velvet gowns. Pure color effects are also in evidence. In accomplishing the general effectiveness it has much to do with the relative amount of satin and velvet, the one fabric used as a trimming for the other. Sometimes the satin is used in a narrow band, sometimes in a wide one, sometimes in a combination of the two.

THE FIRST THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION

For American know that the origi- inal proclamation was lost and a hundred years, that it was found at 1921 when Dr. J. C. Fitzpatrick assistant chief of the manuscript division of the Library of Congress, found the original copy for $300.00 and that it now repo- sits at Congress, and now Editor of the Sentinel has made a facsimile copy which is one of the most valuable documents existence. Commemoration series of in the world. The librarian of Congress Washington's Writings, "found the formation and Publication" of the proclamation. It was act as a result of George Washington Bicentennial ake long hold in the American Art Association on a statement issued chairman of New York City. Dr. Fitzpatrick, at ington, examined the document and pronounced it authentic. It was then Bicentennial committee the following written in long hand by Wm. Jackson, secretary to President Washington and signed by the President, and was agreed

"Resolved, That a joint committee of George Washington's bold hand- both Houses be requested to wait on the President of the United States, to request him to recommend to the people of the United States, to request that we would concur, whole or in part, in such day as may be recommended by the said President; and that both Houses will attend such religious worship as the people may think proper to offer their thanksgiving and prayer, to be observed by them, with gratitude for the great favors conferred upon them by the Supreme Being in the course of their public and private affairs, in the progress of the present war, and the tranquility, union and plenty which they have been favored with since the conclusion of it; and humbly to implore the Almighty God, especially to pardon our national and other transgressions; to enable us all, whether in public or private stations, to perform our several and relative duties properly and punctually; to render our national govern- ment a blessing to all the People by constantly being a Government of wise, just and constitutional laws, discreetly and faithfully executed and obeyed; to protect and guide all Sovereigns and Nations (especially such as have shown kindness to us) and to bless them with good govern- ment, peace, and concord. To pro- mote the knowledge and practice of true religion and virtue, and the in- crease of science among them and us; and generally to grant unto all mankind such a degree of temporal prosperity as he alone knows to be best.

"Given under my hand at the City of New York the third day of October in the year of our Lord 1789.

(signed) George Washington"

Celebration of Thanksgiving Day in America can be traced back to the earliest days of the Massachusetts Bay Colony. From there the customs spread to all parts of the United State.

THE PRIMARY

In a recent speech in Boston, Former Senator Frederick H. Gillett, of Massachusetts, a man of ripe political experience, said:

"I favored the primaries, but I have changed my mind. I am not sure that the primaries are not to blame for the multiplicity and irresponsibility of our laws and the ease and rapidity with which they are passed. I have changed my mind, I am not sure that the primaries are not to blame for the multiplicity and irresponsibility of our laws and the ease and rapidity with which they are passed. In my own state, the delegates to the national conventions are chosen by the primaries, and I have always considered it a matter of pride that I was one of the people who had the honor to be selected by the convention. I should be glad to have an opinion that we have given the primary a fair trial, that the results are against us and that we should go back to the convention."

Senator Gillette is not the only citizen of political affairs who has changed his mind on the value of the primary system. The agree- ment is general that the primary as it existed and as obvious that it hardly could be necessary to repeat them in the old "Keyes" building on the north side, now occupied as a saloon. He usually worked out a good trade, the instance of which compelled him to seek more com- modious quarters. In 1876 he pur- chased of Nelson Avalon the fine business lot now occupied by him, and erected "Masonic Hall." Mr. Crouter being a regular graduate of a school of pharmacy, his practical knowledge of his business enabled him to arrange an attractive store, and build up a lucrative business. During the winter of 1878-9, Dr. Crouter left his business in other hands and attended the Rush Medi- cal College, graduating in the spring. On his return he added a dental room to his establishment and a good practice has rewarded his efforts thus far. During the past fall he enlarged his building and refitted the original size, and when completed, Dr. Crouter will have one of the largest and most complete establish- ments of its kind in Northern Mich- igan. A full stock of drugs, medi- cines, toilet and fancy articles, sta- tionery and fishing tackle is kept.

JOHN NICHOLLS
Lumber

In 1868 Redington, Nelson & Co. came from Wisconsin and invested largely in pine and hardwood lands around the heads of Round Lake and South Arm putting in a steam saw- mill at this place. The mill was de- signed originally to supply the ex- tensive manufacturing establishment of Geo. W. Esterly & Co. at White- water, Wis.

The firm at R.N.&Co. continued until the fall of 1876, when it went into the hands of Esterly & Co. The "Co" being three of Mr. Esterly's sons-in- law, the late Jamestell Frank Gal- kner being the manager. It remain- ed in the hands of this firm until 1876 when it was purchased by Hon. John Nicholls, of Trempeleau, Wis., another son-in-law of Mr. Esterly. Mr. Nicholls personally assumed the management of the concern, and has since continued it proprietor. The mill has the capacity for cutting 1,- 500,000 feet of lumber per annum. Mr. Nicholls is also the owner of the steam tug Minnie Warren. One fact which illustrates the development of Charlevoix and the region is that the product of this mill has been turned into shipped abroad to the scenes of home demand, and Mr. Nicholls' trade is now largely retail. The in- crease of this home demand has called for an enlargement of the mill and a planer, matcher, and other machinery will be put in the coming spring and a new and larger engine probably substituted for the pres- ent one.

UPRIGHT, EMREY & CO.
Merchandise

In October, 1879, Dickinson & Emrey purchased the old store build- ing of Dr. L. Lewis, and displayed in the public a small stock of gro- ceries. The firm employed a limited trade during the fall, and in Jan- uary Mr. Emrey purchased the inter- est of Mr. Dickinson, and continued the business alone until May last, when A. B. Upright purchased a half interest in the business. The trade on the house now developed rapidly, and in August last the firm purchased the Morgan store building near the south end of Bridge street, and mov- ed thereto, at the time largely in- creasing their stock, and adding dry goods and boots and shoes. In their new quarters trade increased rapidly. The following month, H. W. Page, of Kalamazoo, one of our popular "resorters," recognizing the future importance of Charlevoix as a trading center, became an equal partner in the business. The firm then became known as "Upright, Emrey & Co.," and the stock was largely increased. Mr. Emrey is the inventive head of the firm. This is fast becoming one of our most pop- ular and prosperous business houses.

JAMES E. WOOD & CO.
Furniture

Mr. Wood first engaged in busi- ness here in 1877, as a manufactur- er in South Arm. Being a skilled workman of experience and has by industry and fair-dealing built up a fine trade, which at the present writ- ing is one of the necessary ma- terial to turn out promptly and well all kinds of bartered at prices that compete with city establishments. Undertaking a specialty with him, is also done in the most approved styles. They have a good business and are always talking of enlarg- ing their building.

NETTLETON & BAKER
Wagon Factory

H. C. Nettleton is one of the orig- inal settlers of Charlevoix. As early as 1867 he located on a homestead in South Arm, but designing still greater things for himself, he soon moved to the village and began to work at his trade. With the development of the country, however, came a de- mand for his class of work, and he established a shop, and with a blacksmith's shop and paint shop were added, and a stock of lumber and timber. Mr. Nettleton is a practical- ity prosecution of his business. Re- cently Mr. Orin Baker, a black- smith of large experience, has asso- ciated himself with Mr. Nettleton and the business is now fully pre- pared to the times in their line of busi- ness. They turn out first-class work in every instance.

The Deer Slayers

Wednesday the deer hunters be- gan coming in from the north. Geo. Earns, Nick Shores and E. R. Har- ris arrived. Nick bagged one deer, Emil Reiss Harris brought a 200 which he found in a trap he had set for wolves. The animal was easily killed with a club. Friday, President Albert E. Mason, C. Y. Cook, Jas. Ackert and Jean Sowland arrived. Our president was the most success- ful of the party, having brought down three. Mr. Sowland brought home three and C. Y. Cook one.

The hunters report that the deer are plenty, but that wolves are killing off the deer faster than either hunters or hounds.

The little schooner Whistle Weav- er narrowly escaped loosing her spars Saturday evening. She enter- ed the creek under sail, with a high wind and the Captain knew his bearings for the bridge. When the vessel was about half way up the channel, the wire by which the bridge tender draws the bait, broke, and of course the bridge would not turn. Capt. Thompson realized his danger in time to put down his helm, and by just grazing the end of the bridge pas- sage he was able to steer into the mud above the Bearing mill. It was a very neat skipper.

In fishing for the U. S. fish com- mission the tug McLean took into St. James one night last week at 40 tons fish, and on the next Wed- nesday the steamer Hackley brought in 30 tons of trout, which is the best haul she ever took on at St. James.

A poor idiot out in Illinois must have had a wife nights to romp with. I have a young lady friend in Michigan, to wrest her I never should have had a wife, for I have got rid of pain she would scream, and she'd order another big dose.

FEWER IMMIGRANTS COMING

Those experts who profess to be sure that the government can do nothing to help the economic situa- tion ought to be interested in the re- port of Harry E. Hull, U. S. Immigrants Commissioner to the ef- fect that the order of the admin- istration against admitting aliens who might become public charges is thirty-off per cent decline in immigration during September. During the month 17,792 immigrants were admitted against more than 28,000 in the same month in 1929.

The full effect of the order will not be felt for another month or two, according to Mr. Hull with re- spect to the labor coming from Eu- rope, especially, for the reason that immigration visas previously issued are valid for four months. It is ex- pected however that from now on labor immigration from Europe will be considerably reduced.

It might be argued that the labor- ers have slowed up in coming be- cause of economic conditions in the United States but it is to be remem- bered that economic conditions in other countries are in most in- stances much worse than in the Unit- ed States. Mr. Hull says that the in- vasion of the United States by cheap Mexican labor has almost ceased and that labor immigration from Canada is also at the vanishing point.

This decrease in immigration la- bor, brought about by administra- tion order, is one instance to the ef- fect of governmental attempt to bol- ster the economic situation. Now wh- ere are millions of remarkably in- working part time in the United States we do not want additional la- bor coming in from the countries of Europe which are not as well off as we are.

Our system of restricted immigra- tion in America has doubtless served to lessen the effects of the present era of unemployment. Without the system there would have been sev- eral million more alien workers in the United States today seeking jobs.

NAVY AIDS RESCUE WORK

An offer to government officials of British Columbia by Capt. Rous Briggen, U. S. Navy, Commandant of the naval district, Seattle Wash- ington, wherein Navy facilities were placed at the disposal of the British Columbia authorities in an attempt to locate planes and 300+ passengers lost in the Laird River district of British Columbia, was promptly ac- cepted, according to the Navy Re- cruiting Station, Detroit. The Navy Department directed that two sea- plane planes suitable for rescue work be sent to Seattle from San Pedro. Two aviation pilots and two radio-men making the flight. Addi- tional mechanics and spares for planes are en route north on the U. S. S. Lexington, which sailed for routine over haul at the navy yard, Puget Sound.

THE THEATRE
CLARA BOW SINGS IN NEWEST PICTURE

Clara Bow set the world afire with her personality in silent pictures, her voice added a ton of appeal to her first talking talkie, now she blos- soms forth as one of the most en- chanting and delightful "sirens" ing- ers found on the screen so far. In her latest "IT" hit, "True to the Navy," she sings "There is Only One Who Matters to Me," with all the "IT" appeal.

"True to the Navy," which opens a two day showing at the Palace theatre Saturday next, is another naughty natural story like "The Flirt's In." Clara, a soda-fountain girl, serves "IT" with her sodas, and the sailors from the battleships fall hard for it. Although she has a fav- orite boy-friend on every ship, Clara treats them all alike, until Frederick March knocks down all rivals and strides straight into her heart.

Clara's devastating influence, how- ever, upon the sailors, and Frederick March's efforts to win her from them, as she was setin them, March to break off with Clara for a pre- tended reason, and Clara's heartbroken, Nevertheless, she goes after March in a big way and finally gets her boss him.

All sexy times, the "Killdeer," with a big helping of comedy to "True to the Navy." As Clara's employer, Raymond Hatton is the soda fountain. Sam Hardy, soon as the crooked racetrack promoter in "Counsel at Law," is another role in "True to the Navy." The whole cast was carefully chosen to add just the right note of romance, suspense and joyful note to the production, and there are several interesting sets, including scenes aboard the huge battleships in the harbor of San Diego.

Tuberculosis Eradication Campaign Progressing

During the last two months Dis- tricts T. F. Pomeroy of Boyne City, and Merlau, State Veterinary, have been busy. Everything has been done as possible. This will be the third time that the county has been com- pletely tested, and we are glad to state that we are having less and less every year.

Up to the present time over 5,000 head have been tested, and only about twelve reactors have been found, which would indicate that our percentage is slightly over 2 of 1 per cent, which is remarkably low. District Pomeroy has the Eastern portion of the county to have tested and his office will be at the CIRCUIT COURT ROOMS.

Give Mother an Extension Telephone for Christmas

A most welcome, and inexpensive, Christmas gift which Mother surely will appreciate, is one or more conveniently located extension telephones.

In the kitchen, for example, a telephone will enable Mother to place and answer calls without having to leave her work.

A telephone upstairs will save running down to answer calls. Mother will appreciate that convenience. (So will Dad on cold nights!) And, in emergencies, such as fire, sickness or accident, an upstairs telephone is especially useful.

Extension telephones cost only 2 cents a day. To place an order, call or visit the Telephone Business Office.

HUNTING SYSTEM FACES CRISIS? GORDON DECLARES

"The American hunting system faces a real crisis! In the pur- suit man have pulled around into a frenzied herd in a few cases trying to escape impending disaster. There has been too much hikering and far too little constructive think- ing and coordinated action."

Such is the statement of Ernest Gordon, executive director of the Izaak Walton League, sums up the conservative need for the formulation of an American Game Policy, which is to be attempted at the Seventeenth Annual American Game Conference to be held at New York City on Dec. 1st and 2nd, 1930 under the auspices of the American Game Pro- tective Association.

Mr. Gordon is a member of the American Game Policy Committee and has worked zealously for more than two years to form a tentative policy. It is to be presented to the conference for discussion in an ef- fort to build a permanent policy, re- gionally needed.

"So far we have done very little long-term planning in game conser- vation," Mr. Gordon continued. "We have, wasted our efforts on relative- ly live legislation and have done noth- ing to maintain a permanent game habitat. And in all our delibera- tions we practically have ignored the biggest factor of all—human nature.

"Tradition means much to us in America, but we cannot be governed by traditional fallacies which have long since been exploded. Neither can we attempt to "legislate" back to the woods in the hope of having the game return.

"Until we make it possible for the states, the sportsmen and the land- owners to go over the whole field in game restoration we will get no- where. The only safe way is to ap- proach the problem as a whole, as a yardstick by which to measure them try out a number of kinds of game restoration—landowner relations and let experience demonstrate which methods offer the best solu- tion in each section of the state."

WE POOR SINNERS

A ministerial association in a nearby city passed a resolution just recently in which it was declared that "This association publicly con- demns the conducting of all busi- ness on Sundays in our city, except those of charity and necessity."

Resolution against men's evil con- duct is aimed like attempting to sweep back the tides of the ocean. Laws may be enacted that will help men within certain bounds, but more than that cannot be done. The fact remains that we are only on the point that can be done with them is to utilize the good that is in them. There is some good in every human being, and rather than condemn a man and make an outlaw of him, we were better to discover the good that is in him and turn it to some account.

Ministerial associations sometimes are rather too free with resolutions of condemnation. Not that wrong should be condoned nor that sinners should escape proper punishment for their sins, but there is too much good material wrapped up in the souls of transgressors to condemn them as a whole and throw the trash away. When Christ was upon earth he made use of such ma- terial as was at hand, and some of it would be a poor market today.

Human nature cannot be made over in a day, nor to all the time between the two eternities. Minis- terial associations must take men as they are and make the most of them. Men will continue to do busi- ness on Sunday, they will continue to gamble and bet on the games and do a thousand other things that a well-behaved preacher would not approve of. But there is and will be good in all of them and it is the task of ministerial associations to dis- cover the good and develop and en- courage it. — Danville Commercial News.

GHOST WRITING

At last it can be told! A writer in Collier's says: "James Wellver wrote practically all of President Hardings's speeches for him, and most of Coolidge speeches during the early part of his Administration." This fact has been known for some years in those acquainted with inside political history in Washington. It would be interesting to know whether or anyone performs similar service for the present Administration.

BUT THE SYSTEM

But, the election of this month in itself does not presage a Democratic national victory in 1932, although of course a continuation of hard times for two years longer would undoubt- edly go a long ways toward assur- ing such a victory. But the chances are that before the 1932 election the country will be on the upgrade again. And while Democrats have a habit of pulling together in the office nation, they have the equally pronounced habit of splitting up during presidential campaign years. The chances are in favor of the point that can be done with them is to utilize the good that is in them. There is some good in every human being, and rather than condemn a man and make an outlaw of him, we were better to discover the good that is in him and turn it to some account.

DON'T let a Cold Settle in your Bowels!

Keep your bowels open during a cold. Only a doctor knows the importance of this. Trust a doctor to know best how it can be done.

That's why Syrup Pepsin is such a marvelous help during colds. It is the prescription of a famous doctor who specialized in bowel troubles. The discomfort of colds is always lessened when it is used; your system is kept free from poisons, toxins and acid wastes. The cold is "broken up" more easily.

Wherever one travels most folks let Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is sure to do the work. It does not gripe or nauseate, but its action is thorough. It carries off all the stirring waste and poisons, helps your bowels to help eliminate.

Take a spoonful of this family doctor's laxative as soon as a cold starts, or the next time you need simple, laid breath, or a listless, headachy, gassy condition warns of constipation. Give it to the child from sitting cold or whenever they're feverish, cross or upset. Nothing in it to hurt anyone; it contains only laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other mild ingredients. The way it tastes and the way it acts have made it the fastest selling laxative the druggists carried.

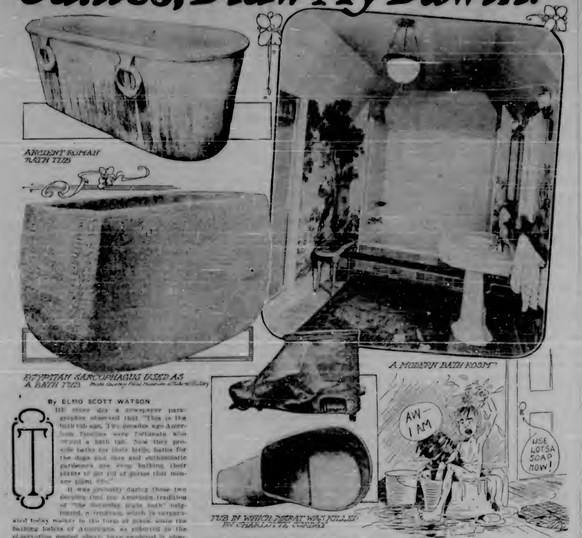
"James, Draw My Bawth!"



By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THE other day a newspaper paragrapher observed that "This is the bath tub age. Two decades ago Americans' freedom were fortunate who owned a bath tub. Now they provide baths for their birds, baths for the dogs and cats and enthusiastic gardeners are even bathing their plants at the rate of six pints of water each morning."

It was probably during those two decades that the American tradition of "the Saturday night bath" originated, a tradition which is vanquished today rather by the rising of public sense than by the inroads of showers. Showers are referred by the observation quoted above, have rendered it obsolete. There is another tradition relating to bath tubs and bathing, however, which is firmly believed by many Americans. That is the popular belief that the bath tub was invented in 1845 by a man named Adam Thompson, who lived in Cincinnati and that this wealthy resident of the Queen City simply handed over his sandwiches to his waiting, stationary tub with plumbing fore and aft, when he lunched.

The only trouble with that story is that it was all a fake, concocted in the fertile brain of some cosmetologist on Attention bibits any emotion. Henry H. Mencken, editor of the American Mercury. In 1946 Mencken was an article for a New York newspaper in which he ascribed the invention of the bath tub to Thompson and praised him for his invention. The story was known well enough and on this day, even though Mr. Mencken in recent years confessed that the story was a hoax, many people believe it to be true. And there are standard reference works which state that Adam Thompson of Cincinnati installed the first modern bath tub in America in 1845.

A well known magazine in this country recently reported the Thompson story and also told that one, which may or may not be equally apocryphal. Unfortunately, every modern bath tub has a basis for every room and cleanliness has become such a fetish in America that many modern houses are built with a bath for every bedroom. Yet it is only 100 years ago that Andrew Jackson had a simple tin bath tub removed from the White House so that the plumbers who had erected him would not be offended by this evidence of agnosticism in their profession and so undemocratic. The White House bathroom was simply an oversized wash basin in which water had to be poured, and was installed by Mrs. Madison about 1810.

As a matter of fact, bath tubs were used in this country even in pre-Revolutionary war days. Studies of primitive conditions show that of people who had any degree of development had sanitary fetishes, and it is very natural to assume that the American colonists gave considerable to personal cleanliness, even if they did not enjoy the highly developed plumbing systems which are found in modern homes in the United States.

As to many other things, Benjamin Franklin was a pioneer in the advocacy of bathing, and the use of a bath tub. "When there were no bath tubs in American homes, and the general custom was to bathe but seldom, Franklin was an advocate of frequent bathing, and took a hot bath twice a week," says a footnote to the book "The Amazing Benjamin Franklin," compiled and edited by J. Henry Smythe Jr., and published by the Frederick A. Stokes company. There is one of the illustrations in that book shows Franklin taking in a "sitzer bath" (similar to the "hip bath" bath tub illustrated above) while a lady in bath cap water in bottles suspended from a crane in an open fireplace nods by.

Elsewhere in the book is the statement that Franklin also advocated the cold water "air-bath" and John Adams maintained that Franklin "was a victim of his own foolish conviction of bathing." So it was apparent that the modern vices for air bathing and sun bathing is nothing new at all!

It was probably due to Franklin's influence that the city of Philadelphia was in advance of other cities in its sanitary arrangements. So if Mr. Mencken had placed his fictitious "inventor of the bath tub" in Philadelphia rather than in Cincinnati he would have made his story even more believable. In the late 1830s plumbers in Philadelphia advertised bath tubs and the report of the watering committee of the city for 1837 notes that 1,200 bath tubs were receiving water from the Schuylkill water works in December 31, 1836.

Whatever the date of the first use of a bath tub in America may have been—and it is doubtful if that "distinguished first" can ever be established definitely—the use of this convenience or rather, necessity, goes back to the beginnings of the human race. The earliest record of plumbing is found in the British museum. It is a reproduction of crude paintings in Sycamore gesso made, it is estimated, more than a million years ago. These paintings show the sort of that period running water through a hollow log from a spring into a cave.

The ruins of Babylon and Mesopotamia had systems of running water. Bathrooms were an important part of the palace of King Minos of Crete. This palace has been partially excavated and the remains show that King Minos enjoyed the finest system of plumbing known in the ancient world. The Count Magni who founded the empire in India 1,500 years before Christ commanded public baths as important as colleges in developing civilization, and he ordered them on a grand scale. Egyptians practiced bathing regularly even during the days of the Pharaohs. Egyptian tombs disclose pictures of the first attempts of the human race to show by means of figurines to plunge into the river mud ourselves.

Some bath tubs were used to create interest of those were discovered at the site of the Olympic games, where they were probably used by the athletes who took part in the events. The ancient athlete who takes a shower after a contest is thus following in a tradition more than two thousand years old.

The Roman baths are still remembered with respect in modern baths. Their heating system is fabulous. The builder covered a square mile and accommodated 5,000 bathers at one time. Besides the 952 cold baths, these colonies were provided with perspiring rooms, dressing rooms, exercising yards, lecture halls, and places for rest. In some of these great public baths, the planning was of the most elaborate and elegant.

The bath in the house of the wealthy Roman was an elaborate affair. It occupied a whole room with a mosaic floor. The water was heated by fires under the floor. Even warmed water which percolated in lead or bronze pipes immediately below the bath. The plumbing fixtures were of solid silver and gold. Even the floor drain proper were made of marble and other expensive building stone. There were, however, in Rome many individual tubs. These tubs were carved from solid marble, and were decorated by master craftsmen as they chose.

Some of the old Roman plumbers were women. This fact was discovered through a study of the plumbing-lines in use. The plumbers had a habit of marking their names on all lead pipe they used. Some of this pipe bears distinctly feminine names. The spelling of real pipe suggests the derivation of the word "plumber." It is derived from the Latin word, "plumbarius," which literally means "a worker in lead." Even today, lead is used extensively by plumbers in making installations.

The early Christians dominated nothing along with the other luxuries of pagan civilization. Bodoffs of Spain it is reported, took his two baths in all of his life, and even the emperor Augustus who but one bathroom in all of the suite of palaces which formed Catherine the Great of Russia, Reference has been made to the Americans tradition of "the Saturday night bath." As a matter of fact this practice really originated among the Norsemen and the Vikings, for that was their favorite time of the week for bathing. They bathed themselves in huts heated to hot stones, and then topped off the operation by having buckets of ice-cold water dashed over their bodies.

Henry IV of England founded an office of chief bath, whose duties consisted of the bath. Candidates for admission to this office were required to take baths as part of their "examination" with lengthened.

A bath tub occupies a prominent place in the history of the French revolution, for it was in one that Jean Paul Marat was slain. In June, 1793, Marat brought the downfall of the Girondist faction, the moderates. Among the Girondist sympathizers was a young girl named Charlotte Corday. She conceived the plan of assassinating Marat. She called twice at his home without success, but the second time she refused admittance.

Marat was suffering from a skin disease and experience had taught him that the cure from his malady would be restored if he sat in a hot bath. One day he was sitting in his bath, with his fob resembled a large skin. The father's feet went into the hot, while he sat in the hot tub. Unsuspectingly Marat let the girl in. Then she stabbed him with a knife. She was later tried for murder, and guillotined.

Sir Robert Peel, the prime minister of England once had Hotel Cecil room constructed a tub out of a single piece of white marble. The occasion of this remarkable was a visit to his mansion by Queen Victoria. The tub, which was five feet seven inches long, was used only by the queen.

In September, 1926, the Peel mansion was removed for a new building, and the tub was sold at auction. It was purchased by a Chicago plumbing manufacturer.

The 5th Sir Robert Peel built his famous Victoria in the manner of Nero, and in Japan. The Japanese have had to submit a modern bath. The Japanese have had to submit a modern bath. The Japanese bath tub is usually a wooden tank, the water is heated by means of a copper coil which is generally fed underneath at the bottom of it. The coil is set in the center of the tub, in order to warm both winter and charcoal, the Japanese make their baths very narrow, so that the bathers may reach all at once. The water tub is used by a number of people. When the family bath is ended, the tub is emptied for the children, and the servants' quota is of the order of the water. A series of tubs is provided for the use another, may be expected to use the same water.

Perhaps the Japanese derived their idea of modern bath tubs from the primitive conveniences in the United States a generation ago of sweeping rubs in wood. In those days plumbing equipment was considered luxurious, and it was looked on as such as possible. This arrangement had two distinct disadvantages from a purely sanitary viewpoint. In the first place, the wood, with its crevices between boards, could be kept clean only with difficulty. Furthermore the water under the tub—I was a lingering place for vermin.

The modern porcelain tub, set off of copper, however, with the general aim of cleanliness. The first tubs of this type stood on claw-like feet, which they derive the name of "claw-foot" tubs, as they are known among plumbers. When the claw-footed tub was the vogue in the days of the "wood-encasing" era of plumbing. It had certain definite drawbacks. The pipes under or from was the floor that the water under the tub enclosed it. As the space could be reached only at the ends, inspection without rips a tub might be designed that did not have this feature.

The plumbing industry accommodated then by producing the typical tub. The arms of this tub are flush to the floor. It is usually installed so that one side and either one or both ends are adjacent to walls. However, floors are modern that one be placed in the center of rooms. These tubs are now used only in very large bathrooms. The modern tub is a fine bathtub so that the bather will not slip and suffer be in danger of it. The bottom is fitted very slightly against the drain, so that the water will flow out rapidly as soon as the waste is released.

The better tubs have two plumbing fixtures that are modern improvements. They are acid-resisting enamel finish and vitreous-enameled fixtures. For years tubs were finished in an enamel that was its brilliancy and lustrous appearance when it was installed by mill. The modern one, however, is finished in an enamel that is not affected by acids. White soft-glazed fixtures and mosaic are now used on the cheaper tubs, the enamel-coated fixtures are found on the better ones. Floors fixtures will be treated, and, as a consequence, the bathroom and dress not have to patch them to keep them looking.

While the finish on tub is of simple design, it is usually beautified by skillful treatment when it is being used. Few tubs have perfectly straight sides. Some have waterfall forms, inches have recessed panels on the sides, the contour tub is built up of a series of planes that suggest the set-backs used in modern skyscraper architecture.

Although bathtub tubs are considered as very recent developments, in reality they were manufactured commercially more than seventy years ago. A few put them on the market, but as there was no plumbing system then their sales fortune was discontinued. As soon as architects and civic improvements began to regard the public health as a thing of importance, however, the bathtub tub was again manufactured. Its form was practically the same as it is today, with the exception that the feet were more massive. Its finish was of solid white enamel. Fixtures were not used, and the water was turned on and off by means of a valve.

Bathroom decorators today consider the bathroom as a distinct room which must have its own treatment. They select fixtures and furnishings that will combine to give a pleasing effect. Some of the most advanced decorators have painted their bathrooms which are tinted by sunlight that are of plain which permits the entrance of more light into these rooms and helps to make them more entertaining.

Lawyer Was Looking to Another Day in Court

A southern lawyer was arguing a case before a judge who was known to be a stickler for technicalities.

A certain section was arguing a point of law in which the judge was well versed. The lawyer was also well versed in the law, but not to the extent that he was familiar with all of its provisions. Being unable to find the exact point he was looking for, he began to read from the statute book, hoping that he would find what he was looking for.

The judge, who was also familiar with the statute, was not to be fooled by this ruse, and he interrupted the lawyer with the following remark:

"Counselor, I am familiar with that statute, and I know that it does not contain the provision you are looking for."

jacks," of which he consumed eleven, and eight eggs.

He was, of course, unable to tell them the location of the camp from which he came, as they took him to the office of the State Conservation Department at Atlanta, where he found that he had traveled 22 miles and very soon after his arrival there, a stranger entered asking for assistance in locating a boy who was lost from Camp Blanchard. Bernard stepped up and told the stranger that he was from that camp, and in the event suddenly came to a close when he at last recognized the "stranger" as his father, who had nearly notified that his boy was "lost in the woods" and had at once started out there in an effort to locate him.

The boy's excitable experience has left its imprint on his countenance to the extent that his own father did not recognize him, and his own mother has been overworked, as he did not recognize his father either.

The boy's appetite is almost to tears at the thought of losing us for a few days. Don't worry, though, we'll come back with the same smiling faces and studious visages as of old. By the way, we hear that it is to be lower the eyebrows if you wish to give the impression of concentration. Pep Club

The High School has organized a Pep Club. The purpose of this Club is to try to put more life in the high school, give talks for pep meetings and take charge of the Christmas program. The officers are: President, Ben Flaherty; Secretary, Lois Fernendes; Treasurer, Angie Scott. The Charter members are: Rob Foster, Robert McCall, John Winder, Mary Simmons, Angie Scott, Lois Fernendes, Bill Novak, Stanley Carter, George LaBlanc.

New members taken in are: Dorothy Griffen, Howard Davenport, Keith Kerr, Esther Brady, Dan Schmidt, Kathleen McCall, Richard McCann and last but not least, Rambler, the dog.

The theme of this play is the bravery of a family love and loyalty which is strong enough to surmount any trouble. Parents and children alike will find not only pleasing entertainment but also much food for thought.

The play has been given with great success by many schools and theatres throughout the country and gives promise of success in Charlevoix. A record-breaking crowd is expected on account of the unusual character of the play.

Now for a brief resume. The family is committed of the mother and father, their son, Hugh, and the twins, Lan and Bradley. Hugh is occupied by business in New York, while the twins are attending college. Some of the politicians in their home town are conspiring against Bernard Ingals, the father, trying to force his resignation from his position. If he does, it will mean that the twins will have to discontinue their studies at college.

Thanksgiving Basket.

The school children are busily assisting the W. C. T. U. by assembling food for the Thanksgiving baskets to be given to the poor. Each child has been asked to contribute a fruit and a vegetable and anything else that he wishes. At present supplies are coming in fast. Mrs. C. Hart reports receiving the W. C. T. U. and Miss French, with the assistance of Mr. Rose, will distribute the baskets on Wednesday afternoon.

Junior Play

The English classes of Miss Milner have observed National Book Week, from November 16 to 22. Posters, stories and book lists on various subjects for pupils of various ages were made.

Modern History

The Modern History classes have written 100 word character sketches of Napoleon as a conclusion to the study of the French Revolution. This one was Marian Tyler's.

Napoleon

Napoleon is regarded by History as the greatest military genius since Alexander. Thoroughly unscrupulous, absolutely without any sense of moral right or wrong, unaffectionate, unsympathetic, egotistical, selfish, and emotionally warped; but with a genious for hard work, this man was the greatest figure of his century.

The dark, alert little emperor with the bad mouth, hard eyes and Roman type, guarding the helpless nations under the three heels of his ambition and Napoleon's genius and trained youth contributed to his strange character.

His piercing black eyes were the windows of a soul whose only thought was of self. He was the youth piece of all that is dominating insatiably ambitious and relentlessly persevering.

American Problems—Tuesday

There seems to be some danger of a rival meeting at two of our leading young men (at least so far as size is concerned), David Coulter and Bill Novak, substantially lined forward to the front seats without an invitation having been issued.

30 DIFFERENT CLUBS WILL BE ORGANIZED

The greatest interest and enthusiasm in Boys' and Girls' Club Work ever shown in this county, has been the case this last week. Nineteen different schools in the county were visited by Miss Slyvia Wilson and Mr. P. G. Lamkin State Club Specialists were very desirous of organizing Club Work. This means that about one-half of the schools in Charlevoix County will incorporate this program in their community life.

The fact that such a large percentage of our Boys and Girls are interested in Agriculture is a direct challenge to the parents, teachers, and others, to give them the type of leadership and guidance that will make them the kind of citizens that America needs now and tomorrow. Think of what this means to have this army of Boys and Girls up to our ideals and developing properly under our leadership and supervision. If they continue to be interested in Club Activities and secure the benefits possible it is up to you and I to give them the best within us.

The following Schools and Teachers plan to have clothing and Handcraft Clubs this winter:

North Bay, Doris Trimble; Taintor, Addie Kline; Wilcoxon, Elizabeth Sullivan; Ironton, Norabelle Thurston; Walker, Ruby Stanley; Murray, Jane Barrett Kilpatrick; Nedine, Lila Coldente; Bay Shore, Nita Shearer; Woodward, Facie Ogden; Bunn, and Virgil M. Wise; Nowland, Carrie Taylor; Izeb, Beatrice Straw; Phelps, Marguerite Sutton, Hayes Center, John Butchert; Clarion, Eleanor L. Yoder; John M. Hayes, Wallace Lake, Mayme Scroggie, Life Woodin; Norwood, Louise M. Lasley; Bundy Knap, Juanita Ogden; Mount Olga Jensen; Bear Lake, Norma J. Moore.

"WELL, I DON'T KNOW"

Washington has been in a haze of doubt ever the national election and 120,000,000 people look to the faces of an army of 300 news writers in Washington and confess that "well, I don't know." It indicates that real political ideas are pretty scarce. That's the reason why at least one news writer wrote the heading to this article.

BOYNE CITY STORE IS BURGLARIZED

placed under arrest and started on his way to the County Jail, in this city, and while enroute, made an open confession of the crime. He also admitted that he struck Sulter on the head with a tire iron, and as he fell, McGuire did the shooting.

McGuire and Patton, who had disappeared, walked to Boyne Falls, where they took a few hours sleep at the home of an aunt of one of the young men, and after having breakfast started out to walk back to Boyne City in hopes of beating Fraley. On the way they were picked up by Fraley's parents who were driving to Boyne City, and left them near the home of an aunt of Patton's who lives a short distance from the fair grounds at the eastern entrance to the city.

Up to this time McGuire and Patton did not know of Fraley's shortcomings, but upon observing in the car of their parents, some of his clothing, were convinced that they were on their way to see him, and surmised that he was under arrest.

Upon reaching a waiting from the aunt that the Sheriff was on their trail, Deputy Knight and Deputy Marshall having been there in search of them they at once started out on foot, arriving in the City at 2:25 P. M. and reached Elmira about 10 p. m. where they spent the night in a box car. They got out in the morning, got some food at a store near by, and returned to the station where they were told by the station man to take another box-car, which was not occupied by the hobo's, but by those in search of the robbery, and suspecting that they were the outlaws, and after they (the officers) entered the car the section man at once notified the State Police at Boyne Falls, who shortly arrested at Elmira and placed them under arrest, and brought them to the county jail.

They say they offered no resistance, but McGuire has a broken nose and Patton's face is badly mutilated, with their trip to Elmira they threw away two pairs of fur-lined gloves and a 38 caliber revolver, which were found alongside the track McGuire was armed with a 32 and 38 calibre revolver and Patton with a Stevens motor Colts and a 38 calibre Smith and Wesson.

They made confessions of the crime committed at Boyne City, also admitted having robbed the Boyne Cut Inn cottages at Walloon Lake, and two weeks ago two cottages between Boyne City and Hortons Bay and last week performed the same operation at three cottages at Camp Arms Resort on Lake Bellaire. They also took $18, all and other accessories from the Bonaparte store at East Jordan, from the Shell station at Boyne Falls, Friday night, of cigar, fuel and gloves, cigarettes, cigars and some money. Saturday at midnight they entered the Bellaire Garage, at the corner of Antrim and State streets, opposite the county jail, and took two new Fisk tires, and the following morning about three o'clock entered Boyne City, where they completed their schedule.

They are being held awaiting their charge, which cannot be made until there is some certainty as to the condition of their victim. All the stolen goods have been recovered. Later—An inquiry received at the Sheriff's office Tuesday that an Essex car with the number of the Boyne City garage in Petoskey, was entirely stripped of tires and all removable parts, and Sheriff Struthers went to the place on the line. We can find no fault with either of these officers, at any rate.

We have heard a funny story about a young Charlevoix boy who has recently made his first incendiary effort. It seems that Charlevoix got lost in the big goose, without a compass, and wandered around for a couple of days before he returned to camp. He says they'd dead deer on the trail. There is no word as to why he didn't believe all of it, any way. He didn't get a deer, but he did get back. Well, things like that happen to the best of men, and probably every hunter has had at least one similar experience.

Well, Michigan has finished its football season without a defeat and will be the fourth time in history. Jones has turned professional, or at least he thinks he has, and also are we to contradict him.

If you want to find out how good Michigan's backfield was under the leadership of the brother of Charlevoix coach, just get a big piece of paper, put your hand on it, draw the pen and then draw lines downward at a diagonal to every team that Michigan has beaten, and continue the procedure as far as it will go.

Pee Wee golf has proved successful, and now a Pee Wee football, using shield of only two inches in diameter, and players averaging one hundred pounds instead of two hundred. We wonder if that isn't only one-half as big as the regular one, and if the game gets only one-half as much newspaper space. Probably very little has played on small fields, if necessarily rather than by choice, but this is the first case we know of a real game made of it.

The Petoskey Evening News has picked an All-Northern team for Class C. Their choice is undisputed by a fair one, but they have probably only seen each team in one game apiece, and so deserving players have undoubtedly been passed. The school two local boys on the first team. Bob Foster won a halfback berth, and Homer Struthers won a tackle. Not a resting place on the line. We can find no fault with either of these choices, at any rate.

Next Thursday Mrs. Utterbeck invites literary and Reading Club. We hope to begin with our Christmas Reviewing at the date.

The Missionary meeting will be with Mrs. P. D. Campbell on Rose street on Wednesday at 2:30. Bring a Thanksoffering.

"Soul and Body" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Christian Science Churches on Sunday, November 23.

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Therefore we are always confident, knowing that, whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord." (II Cor. 5:6).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Because, erroneous as it seems, the moment that life and intelligence are purely spiritual, neither in nor of matter, and the body will then utter no complaints. If suffering from a belief in sickness, you will find yourself suddenly well."—p. 141.

SPORT NOTES HERE AND THERE

By Newman

There isn't very much to say this week, so step me if you have heard this before. Chief among every thing, of course, is the fact that the Polar Bears expect to give the Petoskey Cement team a hard time-ming tonight, Thursday. The Polar Cubs and the Grizzly Bears will mix in a hot preliminary. Neither of these reserve teams has yet been able to stop the big boys this year, so we don't figure that anyone else will be able to do it. "Tiny" Braun, the fat Polar Bear center, has at last arrived for practice, and the dance floor with every one of his jumps. He lost ten pounds of fat the first night of practice, but he has got plenty left, so don't worry. He has served notice that we are not to talk to him as follows: "If you don't say anything good about me, then keep still." We can't, so we will.

The high school boys are still practicing hard for their first game, which is coming soon. They begin to look better and we can expect all of them to do their part toward making the season successful. Coach Kirby has got a crazy idea in his head that they can play basketball, so he has invented a new way to draw the crowd out. If you are interested, ask Pete.

We have heard a funny story about a young Charlevoix boy who has recently made his first incendiary effort. It seems that Charlevoix got lost in the big goose, without a compass, and wandered around for a couple of days before he returned to camp. He says they'd dead deer on the trail. SHERIFF VAUGHN ARRESTS ANOTHER

IS CONNECTION WITH BOYNE CITY TRIO

John Schultz, Chandler Township Takes Thanksgiving Day Her Prison Record

Sheriff David Vaughn made another arrest on Thanksgiving day, to add to the trio who are lining hold at the County jail in the Boyne City robbery case, of which John Sutter city night watchman is the victim.

Upon acquiring information from the three bandits that the accessories stripped from the Essex car in Petoskey several weeks ago, were left with John Schultz, residing in Chandler township, he at once started out to locate the stolen tires, lights, etc.

Schultz was keeping a bachelor's home in a small house on the tarry farm, the place where the robbers claimed they were when the robbery occurred.

Upon being confronted by the Sheriff, Schultz denied any knowledge of the affair but when he found that the information had been given out by the robbers, he admitted his guilt of having had the stolen articles in his possession and told the officers where they were.

Schultz had been over here Tuesday with the guards of Fraley, and upon his return had placed the plunder in a small creek under a bridge, for the purpose of hiding it from the investigating officers.

The tires, etc. were recovered and brought here along with Schultz, who is a convict from Jackson prison on out on parole under a sentence of three and one-half to fifteen years, of which he has served two years and two months on a charge of breaking and entering at Saginaw.

LOCAL YOUNG PEOPLE MARRIED

Mr. Albert Sweeney and Miss Wilma Wagner, of this city were married at Harbor Springs Saturday afternoon. The couple is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Sweeney, 525 Petoskey Ave., and the bride, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wagner, of 302 Hurlbut Ave. The newly weds will reside in the E. E. Crum home, 401 Petoskey Ave., during the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Marshall announce the marriage of their son, Richard, to Miss Mary Jane Clark, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Clark of Grandville, Mich. The ceremony was performed Thanksgiving Day. The groom has always been a Charlevoix resident and is employed by the Petoskey Portland Cement Company. The bride is a graduate of the high school of this city and has been teaching on the lower grades.

RECENT WEDDING OF LOCAL IMPORT

A wedding ceremony conducted by Rev. Father Quant of the parish of which Wm. Walker Quant formerly of Charlevoix and Miss Jessie Louise Rose were the contracting parties is announced to many Charlevoix residents by the return of cards bearing personal friends of the couple.

The ceremony was performed at Bay City, Michigan, on Saturday by Rev. H. E. F. Quant, pastor of the church and father of the groom, at which only the immediate relatives were present.

Mrs. Clark S. Wheeler, D. D. The couple was attended in rapparity by friends of the young couple and the gift room was filled with many beautiful remembrances.

Mr. and Mrs. Quant are taking a trip through the East, with the ceremony ending in Detroit where they will make their future home and where Mr. Quant has a position with the Edmunds Co.

DOCTORS HERE MONDAY

Monday a meeting attended by almost fifteen doctors met with Dr. Dean at the Charlevoix Hotel and banquet will be enjoyed at which clinical work will be carried out throughout the day. A paper presented by Senator Emerson to be used in games throughout the State for the benefit of children. Four counties, Antrim, Charlevoix, Emmet and Otsego compose the district under the jurisdiction of the Health Department of the Michigan State Medical Society.

Brown was high point man for the afternoon with a total of ten points. Davenport and Kirby and Ikens each got two. The other Polar Bears showed mighty well on defense and in bringing the ball down. All in all, we are quite pleased with the showing the team made in its opening game. It is true that the team only scored twenty points, but it held Petoskey to two baskets. Then when we remember that Petoskey's baptism up here last year was a defeat by a score of 45 to 6, and that they have previously played and won another game, we feel sure of that the local boys will be especially weak, although it still remains to be seen whether they quite reach the standard they reached a year ago.

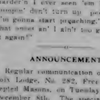
Mr. Hugh Magne was the eleventh man to play for the Bears, and made a showing as he saw it, to the great regret of Coach Todd, of which he have probably played quite a few times when the referee was not as apt to laugh.

Next on the Polar Bears' schedule comes the mighty Ellsworth Park-Rivals, to be played on the Grizzly floor. Ellsworth is one of the greatest forwards in Northern Michigan. While we do not for a minute believe that Ellsworth can take the measure of the locals, we expect it to be a mighty close game. They play on Monday evening, December 8, at 8:00 o'clock. A good preliminary will be played at the usual hour of 7:45.

The preliminary to the last game was between two bunches of unchristened boys, whose names we will not for the sake of convenience. The Polar Cubs and Grizzly Bears, to show their relationship to the Polar Bears, but still not confine them. The Polar Cubs were composed of Wagner, Helms, Kirby, Bergman and Vesley team. The Grizzly Bears were Raby, Metcalfe, Jefferies, Bingham and Arnold. The grizzled ones proved to be too much for the Cubs by three points. The final margin was 13-10. Bingham was high for the bears with a basket and three free throws, while Raby and Jefferies each made two baskets. Kirby was high for the cubs with three baskets and Wagner made two of them. The most valuable men on the floor did not make a basket, but he kept the other side from making plenty. We are speaking of Arnold, who is, as far as we know, the only amateur player in Charlevoix, who is capable of breaking up the Kirby to Helms to Wagner passing attack. But he did it and the Grizzly Bears can give thanks to the generous Cubs, who so kindly let the Bears use Arnold when one of the Bear players failed to show up. However, the game was close, fast, and was a little bit rough, and we think that is what the crowd wants to see, especially in a preliminary. They get enough of real, first-class, clean basketball in the main game, and they would much rather see a preliminary in which both teams are risking everything on a single play, than when they begin play cautious ball. If the preliminary does nothing else besides taking up time, it at least serves to show the difference between a team of Class AA calibre such as the Polar Bears and a team composed of the ordinary run of players.

ANNUAL SALE OF CHRISTMAS SEALS

A smiling Santa Claus carrying a Christmas tree on his shoulder and waving a Merry Christmas flourish on the design for the 1930 Christmas Seal, sale of which locally and throughout the State of Michigan and Nation begins Thanksgiving Day.



Sold as a penny each, the seals provide practically the entire support for the anti-tuberculosis work of the Michigan Tuberculosis Association and its affiliated county societies. This work includes free health clinics, tuberculosis nursing service, sanatorium campaigns, active, intensive passage of necessary legislation, publication and organization research into present day tuberculosis problems.

The seals also make possible extensive work for betterment of child health. Health teaching materials are distributed periodically through the school year to all Michigan schools. Efficient health lectures, under the auspices of the Association, for the past two years given by trained health by classroom lectures, and during the past two years given by trained health by classroom lectures, and during the past two years given by trained health by classroom lectures, and during

Eclipse Furnishes New Moon Data

Moulton Island—The discovery of a new crater on the moon's surface as the sun's corona and further intricate data on the surfaces of the moon were announced recently by astronomers assisting at the Point of Pines observation of the most solemn hour.

Spectroscopic analysis by H. S. A. Mitchell, associate head of the American school observatory, revealed helium, oxygen and nitrogen in the tremendous gaseous masses which widely extend many miles into the atmosphere as sunspots left in their wake by the moon's passage.

The data is expected to be useful in computing movements of the moon, and in foreseeing eclipses.

Chemical examinations of both the east and west edges of the moon were recorded. These appeared to have had their origin in extensive volcanic action. The detail should be the spectrographic study of the meteoric orbital constituents and of the moon's

HAVING YOUR FORTUNE TOLD

Very few of us are equipped with the present knowledge of the science of life to know what is going to happen to us next week or next year. Still we all would like to know what the future has in store for us.

Those who experience difficulty in making decisions and choosing between two courses of action would be glad to have some one tell them which course to take. Many people are confronted by the temptation of dishonesty and would like to know whether or not they will be found out. Others are in doubt as to whether they should marry the person they are engaged to or break the engagement. Many are facing difficulties in their business and would like to know how to overcome them. Others are in doubt as to whether they should change their occupation or remain in the one they are now following. When Sitting Bull Died

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IT WAS just 40 years ago that Sitting Bull came to the end of his trail of trouble—by bullets in the hands of Indian agent Indian police. Sitting Bull, the famous Sioux medicine man of his race, had been a thorn in the flesh of the United States government for many years. From the Dakotas to Montana and Canada he had been a disturbing influence among the Indians. Always he was the center of trouble. Always he was the leader of the hostiles. Always he was the inspiration for the Indian uprisings.

Sitting Bull was born in what is now South Dakota, on the Grand river in North Indiana, December 41, 1831. By the white Indian fate which assigned each color surrounding circumstances or "Indian gift" to each person chosen to herald their time. Sitting Bull was born in the Year of the Greasy Grass, which was the name by which the Indians of his own race. He was shot down by Indian policemen sent to arrest him in the James McLaughlin, agent in charge of the Standing Rock reservation, acting under orders from General Nelson Miles, commander of the Department of Dakota.

Today out on the Standing Rock reservation there are eighty-one Indian men who were known by Mooney men and among them 30 Hunkpapa Sioux, who, as a result of the events which led to the death of Sitting Bull, received on the White House on President Harrison. But there is in the name, and although it is merely enough of them are living to form an interesting group of interesting events and to be found on the Indian rolls, and although they are not known by the white men of today for the deeds which made them famous, they are known by the Indians themselves.

When Sitting Bull and three were close who fought the court as chief of the tribe. His position as medicine man had made him the leader of the Sioux as a result of the threat which had been over the Americans towards the Indians. He was a leader of the Indians and a leader of all the Indians. The fact of the matter is that the Indians had been settled this nature. In the proper employment for which they were fitted, which is that of the Indians, but they were fitted by nature for the purpose of the Indians to whom a last resort. Between the two there is a great gap.

Immediately after Sitting Bull's retirement and imprisonment with his followers at Fort Yates, he was released on a parole under which he was to remain on the reservation. But he was not to be allowed to go to the Indian agency. He was to be allowed to go to the Indian agency. He was to be allowed to go to the Indian agency. He was

United States Fire Loss Increased Three-Fold in Quarter Century

Defective Chimneys and Forced Firing Blame! for Most of the Home Fires.

America's annual fire loss increased from $345,000,000 in 1900 to $550,000,000 in 1928. Notwithstanding there has been a slight decrease in some quarters since the National Board of Underwriters of Hollands Mutual's fire tax still averages a DREADFUL annual increase.

About 10 per cent of this huge yearly expenditure, amounting or destroyed buildings, is sum that can largely be traced to carelessness, neglect largely chimney construction and the incidents one of some authority to somewhat to unfailing attachment heating plants. Obviously, fires traceable to any of these causes are preventable fires and the responsibility therefor lies with the home owner.

Chimney fires that cause fire are unknown if chimneys are built in accordance with approved construction principles, and on authoritative footings and adequate foundations.

Beginning of a heating system that fits the house requirements is the correct initial selection of heating plant. Then comes proper installation, equipment and maintenance.

NICARAGUA VOTES

Speaking of elections, it is not to be forgotten that the people of Nicaragua recently had an election, two presidential votes and three vice presidents were cast there on November 4th. The reason there was an election last in the fact that the election was held under the auspices of the American naval personnel, and an American election commission. Having had experience with our own, some contended by Uncle Sam's forces, the people knew the election would be a fair one. So there was no rioting and no disatisfaction.

The election was a fair and free vote. It was preceded by several weeks campaigning in which the people heard all the issues discussed by public speakers and there was an open play. The people decided what candidates they wanted to support and they supported them, with the result rather than the minority.

The liberal government, which had control in office is conducted by a policy of cooperation with the United States, and to the outcome of the election Nicaragua owes the peace and prosperity it enjoys.

There is no doubt that the election was fair and free from fraud.

ST. MARY CATHOLIC CHURCH
Rev. R. E. Fitzpatrick, Pastor

Low Mass at 8:00 a. m. and High Mass at 10:00 a. m. on first, third and fifth Sundays at Charlevoix.

Mass every week day except Saturday at 8:00 a. m. at Charlevoix.

The pastor goes to Bay Shore on the second and fourth Sundays and on all Saturdays.

In choosing Christmas gifts for children, avoid complicated or fragile articles that give pleasure only for a short time. Select materials or tools with which the boy or girl can make things. Blocks for the younger ones, paints and crayons for the next older, with some good pictures to color, are always accepted also. The still older boy will like a few real tools—a hammer, saw, T-square, and plane—while his sister will be overjoyed with a small workbasket with scissors, thimble, and a good assortment of threads and needles, measure, emery, and so on.

TO THE TAXPAYERS OF THE CITY OF CHARLEVOIX

Notice is hereby given that the delinquent tax roll for the city of Charlevoix has been delivered to me and that the taxes therein levied are payable at my office in the Cosgrove Library at any time on or before the 9th day of January 1931 without charge for collection. On all taxes remaining unpaid after that date a collection fee of four cents on the dollar will be charged and collected.

Ben Franklin's Lightning Rod Still Good After 150 Years

Benjamin Franklin, recognized father of the lightning rod, was appointed in 1749 by the Royal Society of London, at the request of King George II, to provide St. Paul's Cathedral with proper protective system.

The architect of this famous church was Sir Christopher Wren, who lived to see it completed in 1710. Franklin decided a system of lightning protection which made use of the metal parts of the building itself as conductors; and whenever there was a break, he had its points sawn away especially designed leaves from both sides, and where valves are very rusty, 200 thick layers of lead foil are still sound and strong to this day. They were ordered replaced a few years ago, and when valves are worn through as good as new—practically as in the days when Franklin was alive.

This information is given on the authority of Alfred Hands, B. A., F. R. S. H. Mr. S. of J. G. Gray & Son, engineers and erectors of lightning conductors, London, England.

The rods, when cleaned, were found to be typical of good wrought iron. Like all iron wrought from the old-fashioned unwrought with the slag fibres, but that otherwise compound of a metal of high purity. Rust had attacked it upon the surface, but had not penetrated deeply at any spot, though for the rods near the base were as good as the day they left the forge. Atmospheric corrosion is very much more effective upon wrought iron than upon cast iron, which, on account of its greater density, is not so much attacked.

JEWEL THIEVES KEEP BUSY

New York.—There was an increase in the number of jewelry thefts and robberies during the last few months of 1926 over ever a corresponding period of that year, according to the Jewelers' Security alliance, but the entire losses suffered by thieves were no more than offset by the additional number of arrests, convictions and recoveries of watches and diamonds. Crooks have been attracted to the trade and a helpful number, police believe, will be lost to it months, one and possibly forever.

Almost three-fourths of the persons from city outlaws of the country, the report states, "starting 'business' in their accustomed manner suddenly and greater cases would have prevented nearly any of these losses."

A new system prizes by the alliance is a hint which may extend clear across the country and may hint for months or even years. A tiny piece of the payment to some innocuous concern of a sum of dollars. It places the field of crime timers for the test in one jurisdiction and will go all the way to the Supreme Court if necessary to find year or the years to come.

JEWEL THIEVES KEEP BUSY

New York—There was an increase in the number of jewelry thefts and activities during the first nine months of this year over a corresponding period of last year, according to the Jewelers' Security Alliance, but the extra losses suffered in robberies were more than offset by the additional number of arrests, convictions and recoveries of stolen gems. Convictions have been obtained in 107 cases and a large number of persons sentenced within the last two months, the alliance reported.

"Though there have been a few of the so-called 'big' robberies of late, the average loss per robbery is less, and the number of petty thefts is greater," said Frederick Peters, president of the alliance. "This is a good indication that the underworld is not getting the rich pickings it used to get. Also, the public is getting wise to the fact that it is dangerous to keep valuable jewelry in the home. The best place for it is in a safe deposit box."

"A less active season in the summer than that which may extend clear across the country and may last for months or even years. A long season in the pursuit by some humorous code name of a man of means. If crime the total of crime bonus for the year in our industry and will surprise you. We don't anticipate any increase in numerous rates for next year or the years to come."

"Be on your guard. Don't trust anyone you don't know intimately. Don't let a single piece of jewelry out of your sight for a moment. Watch your customers, especially strangers, every minute they are in the store. Don't worry them by following them as you would waiting on a person. Honest people won't resent your care and caution and will see that you are alert and won't try any tricks on you."

The report points out that the increased number of thefts from automobiles was due to the practice of leaving valuables in unlocked machines and then going to lunch or dinner or attending conventions in the open. Thieves have learned that women are more likely to leave valuables in their cars than men, and that the hours between noon and 2 o'clock are the most productive for the thief.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

One of the best known figures in New York is Don Francis D. Duffy. Purely owing to the fact that he was captain-in with the "Fighting Sixty-ninth," Father Duffy has been paroled from that portion of the city commonly known as "Hell's Kitchen." Going to a dinner one evening, he passed a group of them standing on the corner of Forty-second street and Broadway and stopped to speak. He was wearing a dinner suit with his black shirt, and felt that he looked rather well, including his evening attire, he decided.

"Well, hum how do you like the scenery?"

"Father," said one, "you ought to know that patrol leather shoes go with any clothes."

"Any other criticism?"

"Yes," said another. "White gloves should either be worn or turned in the hand."

An evening overcoat should be fold-ed over the left arm," remembered a third. Father Duffy was becoming a bit nettled.

"Maybe you have some other rag gentlemen" he said, a bit sarcastically.

"Just this," came a drowning voice from the rear of the group, "when you go yourself up like that, you ought at least to take a taxi."

Father Duffy writes more letters to the police and fire commissioners than any other mayor. Every time a patrolman or fireman gets into trouble he writes to said Father Duffy to write a letter, believing that will straighten things out. He always asks what the difficulty is and always is assured that the letter will help matters. Often enough so that it was three-quarters written before he remembered that it was against civil service to write letters to the police and fire commissioners than does the

TYRANNICAL LAWS BREED CRIME

The problem of crime increases in America till never before are we so long as we limit a tyrannical" says Justice John F. Wolverton of the Los County, California, Judge Wolverton states that tyrannical law "stifles the spirit of the free land Or, worse, organizing and government, trending more and more to the control of the public and giving great discretion to executive officers, is sure to lead to the loss of liberty. Liberty is the life blood of our institutions if the officers serve the citizens as masters instead of as servants, tyrannical laws are bound to be made and enforced, and the people will be enslaved. Will not an increasing disregard for law and increasing crime be the natural consequence?"

THE CRIME INDUSTRY

Crime is now one of our most flourishing enterprises, the country's largest industry, according to Herbert Asbury in an article in the current issue of Collier's Weekly.

Likewise, it is a highly organized industry, to the degree that the police of a single city, Chicago, say, have on their pay roll the names of 4,000 criminals, and the Chicago Crime Commission has compiled a national catalog of more than 30,000 criminals, with a detailed description of each one's methods. Every year the underworld gathers more prosperous. These largest are spreading a and terror. It is not a coincidence that changes in the history of world that "the criminal gang is the natural outgrowth of modern society, and that the age in which the greatest gangs flourished was the age in which the greatest fortunes were made, and are now being made. Speculation in stocks, grain and real estate is the modern counterpart of piracy, and the methods employed are approximately identical."

Until we can solve problems that do not confront us, Asbury believes, we must continue to be the most criminal nation in the world, and the most law-abiding people.

TOO MUCH RECKLESSNESS

A small installation of recent fires would have paid for adequate fire protection. Reckless waste of property is a form of recklessness. Clearly the public must be educated to the point where it will demand adequate fire protection and the sacrifice of needless waste.

AMERICA'S FOREST RANGERS

Forest rangers are left in cities with little to do, and in the country they are overworked. Their duties are increasing and apparently they are creating the daring myth that created Robert Hood, Jesse James and Billy the Kid. Instead of being a band of men appointed by politics to look after forest fires and started with no appreciation of the importance of their work, the rangers should be considered as important an arm of the government as the army or navy. The people thought they saw the "finish" there when millionaire workers set fleet on the country lands, but it is evident that the end is not yet. The volume of easy or unwise go on. That is where the training of the land to fundamentals does that members of the public or a gang be "finished" by the law. Then they are started with an opportunity to begin.

MISSOURI VOTERS UPHOLD AMERICAN IDEALS

In the last election the people of Missouri were called upon to vote on a proposal to prohibit private ownership of automobiles. Many striking arguments, comprehensive in that they were intended to cover every conceivable objection to the use of the machine, were hurled in the face of the voters. Missouri, however, is a state of progress and knows what it wants, and has always had the courage of its convictions. It voted down the proposal by a tremendous majority.

The vote is significant in that it was a clear-cut declaration of the people's faith in the American system of private ownership of industry, with its drive, high level of low cost, and ready availability.

TERRITORY OF HAWAII

The little territory of Hawaii exported more than $60,000,000 in raw sugar in 1929, and even though the production was larger than in 1928, the low price of sugar occasioned the shipment of merely one-third by Hawaiians more than $40,000,000.

The growing and canning of pineapples, Hawaii's second industry, also set a new high record in 1929, the pack amounting to 9,211,376 cases. In this industry, as in sugar manufacture, the value was kept down by low prices. The approximate value of pineapples exported was $35,850,176, a increase of about one million dollars as compared with 1928.

The tourist trade, referred to as Hawaii's "third industry," brought to Hawaii in 1929 about ten million dollars in new money. There were 20,000 visitors, compared to 19,000 in 1928. Many of them visited the Hawaii National Park, as also did many Island residents. The scenic way and delightful climate of Hawaii National Park attracted 109,847 visitors in 1929, an increase of over thirty thousand over the previous year.

PLANNING AHEAD FOR ROADS

According to the State Interstate Road Conference recently held in Washington, D. C., all countries face the problem of providing secondary and local roads suited to the needs of the farmer and modern motor traffic.

To do this the Conference points out that it is necessary to create highway programs years in advance. Funds must be carefully budgeted. Adjustments to meet changing conditions or improved methods may be made as the projects develop.

In this country few states have given sufficient attention to their farm-to-market or rural road problems. Within the last few years, however, the agricultural depression has brought vividly in the front the fact that farm progress in the future will depend largely on good roads, as Secretary of Agriculture Hyde has pointed out that living standards are higher where roads are good, than elsewhere. In short, fast and efficient, year-round transportation is as vital to the farm as to industry.

As civilization advances, communication of all kinds increases at an increasing value. Good roads produce benefits—social and economic—that cannot be adequately expressed in terms of money. They are the ground work on which to build a greater and more prosperous nation.

TO THE TAXPAYERS OF THE CITY OF CHARLEVOIX

Notice is hereby given that the December tax roll for the City of Charlevoix has been delivered to me and that the taxes therein levied are payable at my office in the Carnegie Library at any time on or before the 9th day of January 1931 without charge for collection. On all taxes remaining unpaid after that date a collection fee of four cents on the dollar will be charged and collected.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS
Frank P. Litchert

All reports coming to us from the nations to the south of us indicate that Uncle Sam's relations with Latin-America are steadily growing more cordial. The recent Nicaraguan election, held under American supervision at the request of the Nicaraguans themselves, has created a profound impression everywhere. Our relations with Chile and other South American nations are said to be more cordial than they have been for years.

The fact that this is true is all the more surprising in view of insidious efforts which have been made in the past to bring about ill feeling between the United States and Latin-America. This effort has been well organized and has extended over a period of years and its inspiration has been not in the Western Hemisphere but in Europe. Any observing American who has traveled in the countries to the south of us has seen all this effort. European nations from the beginning have controlled the destinies of infected their people not only between Europe and Latin-America but between the United States and South America. As a result, for years, most of the foreign news and editorial comment in the South American press opposite of our policy.

Those who are attempting to blow out the last election was a good thing for the government controlling private ownership of industry, were or drys, look to oil or lost Lindl, may to a city outlaws.

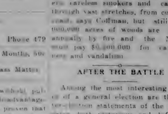
Old War Monitor Reduced to Lowly Service

Not long ago as a shipyard in New Orleans, a store in what belonging to the Texas Pacific-Missouri Railroad was knocked in for repairs. Engineers on the Southern Pacific lines had noticed a strain and when the big steel structure was lifted from its foundations they found a crack almost a foot long in one of the steel girders.



The "Guadalupe" Up for Repairs

So commonplace has hull wear been that engineers on the Southern Pacific lines will not call for ships' plates a year in advance of the time they are to be put on, but will order them when they are needed. Consequently, when a material must be used.

Under the combination of pains and aches, identifying marks were discovered. "Pinkerton." It was not difficult now to notice her story. The Guadalupe, launched in Chesapeake Bay built in 1863, one of Admiral Farragut's vessels in the battle of Mobile Bay in 1864. A war relic reduced to lowly service.

SOME AMERICAN OBSERVATIONS
By Jay Taylor

A prominent Englishman, who has had much experience in dealing with the Russian problem, recently made some observations on our Russian policies. He thinks that those who favor the repeal of the 18th amendment would help their cause by outlining a program for the sale of liquor that would save the country from the corrupt politics that prohibition has developed. It has been necessary to intervene in Latin-America not only to protect the lives of our citizens and their property but in the interests of the people of the revolution-torn land itself.

So long as our own newspapers and foreign people and little attention to Latin-America this anti-American propaganda, inspired in Europe, was permitted to go on without interruption. This propaganda was not inspired by pure malice to injure the United States. The work was carefully planned objective. The purpose of forging hostile relations between the United States and Latin-America was to prevent Uncle Sam from getting a share of the trade with these countries.

But the League of Nations advocates are still urging us to enter some sort of league that will bind America to take sides against the aggressor in any European war. But how would we decide who are the aggressors? Our information would come mainly from those news agencies that for years have specialized in misrepresenting the facts to the American people. Might we not find ourselves fighting on the wrong side? Why isn't it better anyway to let the European settle their own quarrels?

THE FARM BUDGET

A farm budget helps the farmer to choose the most profitable types of farming, to keep a good balance between crops or between crops and livestock, to distribute his work and other supplies will be used, to figure out the amount of cash needed, and to determine the net returns that may be expected. Farmers' Bulletin 1564-F, which may be obtained from the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., contains information on making a farm budget.

PRESERVING THE KNOCK

The knock of the campaign engine will not be taken to the public garage because (a) it is useful to the owner, and (b) the public mechanic might care if we ignore it.—Ithaca Journal-News.

He: "When I dance with you I feel as though I were treading on clouds."

She: "Don't kid yourself. Those are my feet."

"Jack said he'd kiss me or die in the attempt."

"Gracious! and did you let him?"

"Well, you haven't seen any funeral notices, have you?"

Telephone Increase in Past Decade Outstrips Growth in Population

According to figures of the U. S. Census Bureau, the population of this country on April 1, 1930, was in round numbers, 122,000,000. On January 1, 1920, the corresponding figure was 105,710,000, and the increase in population during the intervening decade has been 16.1 per cent.

On April 1, 1920, there were approximately 35,170,000 telephones in the United States. On January 1, 1930, there were but 17,668,000 telephones. The increase in telephones during these 10 years has been 53.2 per cent, or almost four times its percentage of increase in population.

GETTING DOWN TO FACTS

Speaking of a recent fire in a certain town, one exchange said a certain family lost all its property. The other newspaper said the family lost a used flivver, and J. E. Frost of the Bunceton Eagle says they both were probably right.—Kansas City Times.

"Who's the absent-minded one now?" asked the professor as they left the church one rainy night. "You left your umbrella back there and I not only remembered mine but I brought yours too." And he produced them from his coat.

His wife gazed blankly at him. "But," said she, neither of us brought one to church."

She: "Aren't you a little worried about your affairs back home, John? Are you sure that new clerk you hired is trustworthy?"

He: "Pshaw, Annabelle! I am not the least worried about it. I always know what he's going to do next."

She: "And what's that?"

He: "Nothing."

From The Sentinel Files

News Items Taken From The Sentinel of the date Thirty Forty, Fifty and Sixty Years Ago.

SIXTY YEARS AGO

Dragonfly!—Prince a citizen of Harbor, we learn the following: The School Board recently engaged a lady teacher for their winter term of District school. Some parents or pedants, being dissatisfied with the transaction, went at night to the school house, removed the windows therefrom, and secreted them in the woods, where they were found. We would wish to see these individuals apprehended and dealt with according to their just deserts.

FIFTY YEARS AGO

Wm. M. and John C. Miller were out last week and killed several deer.

An effort will be made this winter to make Charlevoix Postoffice a Money Order office.

The Cosmos Concert on Thursday evening, was attended by a fair audience. The net receipts were $—.—.

It is reported that William Flanigan is to succeed Mr. Wheeler as D. M. Atwood, Mr. W. being about to resign.

John C. Miller was one of a party of deer hunters out on the east side of Hamlin Pond a few days since, when a deer and took the runway with a dog following his dog giving tongue—Miller stationed on the pond heard a yell as the flanks of the dog fastened into the deer's rear. He whipped out his knife, killed the deer by his mastiff, and cut his throat.

OUR HOTELS

A Few Words About the Charlevoix Hostelries and Their Barkeeps

Whether visitor or resident, people perhaps think that the hotel capacity of the town more than equalled the demand. Looking at the average year's business of the Charlevoix hotels and lunching houses, it may be safely said that they fall far short of it. It is a generally conceded fact among the hotel men here that a hotel with a thirty-room house would prove a profitable investment and would not by any means diminish the business of the present houses. In this article we propose a brief mention of the hotels and a brief mention of the hotels and a brief mention of the hotels.

THE FOUTAIN CITY HOUSE

The house, originally, was built in 1867—was exactly the finest log house for the town in the county of A. Fox & Co., and stood on the west wing of the house, and a lot of ground, made a pleasant affair high. The growing popularity as a summer resort found Mr. Cooper in to enlarge as a summer resort. Now, the three story upright was erected in front of it, and to be found in the same scope of territory.

THIRTY YEARS AGO

The Hamilton Stepmaster's Reserve will probably begin its winter meetings at the dock office as soon as Capt. Billy Freeman returns home from Chicago. A matter that will demand the attention of the Society as one will be the right of Capt. Fred Campbell to belong to the Club. He is charged with lack of "sand," as an inclination to turn pale when he hears the wind whistle from the northwest. Two or three Beaver Island citizens will be put on the board to testify that they were land-bound and hide-bound here for six days waiting for Pete to get a move on him toward the west-ward-bound way. Capt. Wilbur, also, has been bound to say that he thinks Capt. Pete has "sold feet" when he sees a wind flying or hears a gull scream three times. The Society will from this on abandon Old Sol for years and return to Capt. Wilbur's five cent lozenges.

MOTHERLY MALE FIGHTS WIFE TO ACT NURSE-MAID

New York—The cork Hungarian partridge is one hubby who will fight his wife for the honor of being nurse-maid to his children. The mothering instinct is so highly developed in the male of this gaily hued, which is being imported to this country in thousands by many state conservation departments, that if mating "Hans" often have terrific combats days ending in tragedy or divorce, with the cock strutting proudly away with the offspring.

This unusual secret of the partridge family is a big reason the bird is increasing in America, declared Llewellyn Legge, Chief Game Protector of the New York Conservation Commission, before the Seventeenth American Game Conference at Hotel Pennsylvania on Jan. 1 and 2. It enables the young birds to survive even if the mother meets with some accident, and also causes the female to bring forth two broods in a season, in a vain attempt to rear a brace of youngsters.

But the lady has her day prior to matrimonial disillusionment, according to Mr. Legge's observation. Unlike the female of some species, she makes no coy effort to conceal the fact that she is the chosen. She selects the lover she prefers whether the likes it or not. And game farm keepers have found that if they try to sell her on the idea of a mate not to her liking, that unlucky swain is fortunate to escape with his neck.

After the birds have mated in the spring, however, and the female has laid her nest of approximately 25 eggs—an accomplishment at which even this motherly male can boast no less special ability, the cock insists on incubating the eggs. Should the hatched bird leave her nest, he takes possession, and it is often quite a task for the female to drive him off again.

As soon as the young hatch out, Mr. Legge related the cock commences calling in his most coaxing manner, the brood to his side. Then he escorted their mother to inside under his wing.

This often brings warm family discussion, Mr. Legge averred, but usually ends with the mother insisting herself with a second brood.

CHURCH INFORMATION

Next time you have a leg of lamb, try having the butcher bone it. You will be surprised to find how many attractive servings can be made from either a hot or cold boned leg. There will be sliced evenly from end to end.

Christmas gifts from the kitchen will be sure to please. A few jars of jelly or preserves or pickles—some of your most appetizing cookies—a fruit cake or a tasty layer cake—some homemade candies—are all good last minute remembrances. Dainty wrappings make them reflect the spirit of the season.

Here are four good rules on the care of milk in the home. First, provide a receptacle on the porch, in which the milkman can place the bottled milk, to protect it. Second, place the milk in the refrigerator as soon as possible after it is delivered. Third, leave the milk in the bottle until it is time to use it. Fourth, do not return unused milk or cream to the bottle. Keep it, in a separate container.

If your rooms are covered with a figured wall-paper, choose a plain colored curtain material. If the wall-paper and most of the furnishings, including the rug, are plain, the curtains may be figured, preferably with a background the same color as the walls, or slightly deeper than the walls. In choosing figured materials, choose conventional designs that will stand the test of being looked at day after day. Don't forget that stripes tend to increase the height, and if used in excess, tend to give a stiff, uncomfortable effect. Sprawling designs make windows look shorter and broader.

"If we consider the frequent reliefs we receive from laughter, and how often it breaks the gloom, which is apt to depress the mind and damp our spirits, with transient, unexpected gleams of joy, one would take care not to grow too wise for so great a pleasure of life.—Addison.

Who remembers the good old days when a Democrat who offered to help a Republican administration make good after the election, or vice-versa would have been regarded as a good subject for a lunacy commission?

Life is the acceptance of responsibilities or their evasion; it is a business of meeting obligations or avoiding them. To every man the choice is continually being offered, and by the manner of his choosing you may fairly measure him. — Ben Ames Williams.

"Who belongs to de army of de Lawd?" shouted the colored preacher. A man in the back seat jumped up and said: "I does."—"To what branch of de army do you belong?"—"De Baptist."—"Get out, yo' don't belong to de army, yo' belongs to de navy."

THE THEATRE

O P HEGGIE SAYS STOCK BACKBONE OF ACTING PROFESSION

The stock company is the medium most city in the backbone of the acting profession, according to O. P. Heggie, who played one of the leading roles in "The Last Man," which comes to the Pierce Theatre on Saturday and Sunday.

The greatest training for talking pictures is the stock company, according to Heggie. The plays usually change every week, and while an actor is appearing in one role he must also rehearse and learn the lines of another. This makes for real versatility.

The most valuable person in talking pictures is the one who is a "trouper" says Heggie. "There is very little comedy in a troupe, endowed with a thorough knowledge of his craft. My advice to anyone who hopes to succeed on the talkies is to work in a small stock company where you have to do everything except shift the scenery."

Heggie appeared in more than one hundred and fifty in New York and London before he was enticed to Hollywood. Walter Huston plays the lead in the picture, "The Last Man," while Heggie takes the part of the uncle in the wheel chair. Clarence Badger directed the picture, for First National as a Vitaphone production.

KILLS 103 RATS ON NEBRASKA FARM

A Nebraska farmer killed 103 rats in 12 hours with K-R-K Rat Killer Tablets. As for the smaller required to fill our Christmas needs, it is the neighborhood of six million trees annually. The trees which find greatest favor in the East come from Nova Scotia, three-fourths or more of the trees used in the North and West come from New England and New York while the Middle States would supply the forest trees and timber from numerous states.

Hundreds of men labor for almost a month before Christmas are employed in cutting, baling and preparing trees for the millions who await them. New York alone requires 400 to 500 carloads of trees annually; Chicago uses 200 to 250 carloads and Philadelphia more than seven million people in large centers like Boston, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, and Detroit require from 100 to 200 carloads each.

A fair number of carloads are trees averaging about 100 trailers, or 1,000 trees, which have been tied in bundles of three for convenience in handling. New York and its suburbs will use freely as many as 60,000 trees annually.

The normal 100 by Chaldean trees and other groups such as holly and mistletoe in a treeless area are considerably augmented, at least one million dollars is spent for the family Christmas tree with the attendant holly wreaths and sprays of mistletoe.

FARM WOMAN BENEFITED

After Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lickdale, Pa.—"Before I was married, my mother and sister and I did all the farming work on a 65-acre farm for eleven years. I married a farmer and now in addition to my household work and the care of my children I help him with the outside work on our farm. After my last child was born I began to suffer as many women do. Finally our family doctor told me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did and now I am a new woman and know that good health is having that ache."—Mrs. Orval I. Bastian, R. What is Christmas Without a Tree?

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

WHAT is Christmas without a Christmas tree? Not much of a day, every one will agree. So the absence of this emblem of Christmas would mean this something very essential to our yuletide celebrations could be lacking. Yet how many of us give any thought to this very necessary part of our holiday, nor where they come from, who gets them for us, are there different varieties of evergreens, in the cutting of Christmas trees a factor in the diminution of our forests, and so forth, which we are constantly being warned, and a dozen other interesting questions which readily come to mind.

Some of these questions can be answered briefly, but others require more detailed information. As for the number required to fill our Christmas needs, it is the neighborhood of six million trees annually. The trees which find greatest favor in the East come from Nova Scotia, three-fourths or more of the trees used in the North and West come from New England and New York while the Middle States would supply the forest trees and timber from numerous states.

Hundreds of men labor for almost a month before Christmas are employed in cutting, baling and preparing trees for the millions who await them. A fair number of carloads are trees averaging about 100 trailers, or 1,000 trees, which have been tied in bundles of three for convenience in handling. New York and its suburbs will use freely as many as 60,000 trees annually.

The normal 100 by Chaldean trees and other groups such as holly and mistletoe in a treeless area are considerably augmented, at least one million dollars is spent for the family Christmas tree with the attendant holly wreaths and sprays of mistletoe.

As for the question of the cut of Christmas trees depleting our forests, it is a frequently asked one because it is a scientific "counter-irritant"—not just a salve—it penetrates and stimulates blood circulation, helps to draw out pain and pain.

enthroned prominent. It is one of the most beautiful evidences of Christmas, serving and bringing to have one. Instead of COMMON let us have SOMEthing different and the only thing feasible. Let the common tree symbolize the birth of Him who loved little children—tried to instill loving kindness in the hearts of men—and let Christmas trees be small enough to stand in their lives."

As for the different kinds of evergreens used for Christmas trees, there are many which are considered, but the ones which are actually used which are definite favorites for this important season. The "preferences" are the fine, healthy specimens of the spruce, pyramidal, beautiful deep green color and soft, fragrant needles which, as any child will affirm, the tree bellies to do.

Trees from the spruce are recognized by the fact that the farthest leaves are grouped in tufts on the horizontal branches, due to the crowding of the leaves on the upper surfaces which gives them a more or less flat appearance. Historic Monument to French Hero in Danger

News from Paris states that there is a possibility that the citadel of the fifth town of Douai in southeastern France may be taken off the official list of historic monuments, and that the destruction of its ruins may follow. Some circumstances latter interest who had due to defense of the great king's reign and at Hennebont. The great town dates at Instant which is mentioned—too late to know whereabouts of the support of his regiment, is a famous legend. Hennebont was situated at Napoleonic, the station Brest was inserted in Paris. In the famous "Siege of Hennebont," the mother and this took the motto, Hennebont is depicted as a strategic town, able to defend the attacks of the Romans. The Jeanne Hachett was a heroine of the Middle Ages, who took part in the famous Siege of Beauvais, then in 1574 their attacked and defended Charles's conquest of Burgundian in the Pyrenees. The citadel is three who built on the fourteenth century by Sebastien Vauban, the great French military engineer, who superintended the construction of the fortifications of French 1691 were constructed during his offices.

Hope for Restoration of Isle to Fertility

A representative of the United States Department of Agriculture has spent the past summer at Lavan in Java, a small spot in the Pacific ocean about 1,000 miles southeast of Honolulu. Lavan Island formerly had enough a guano bank, but since were worked and more than a decade ago Guanacos, Peruvians from South America and the coast of Japan, the latter being brought over with the Lavan islands an indoor profit. In the guano deposits on the islands were found large numbers of sea birds, which had made their home there since a period of from one to five, while natives have been slightly. Most of the small Hennebont guano still remains, and the larger heavier than the species, afford for additional fertilizer. The natives, ambient the heavy and yet sparse productivity, his time the question is a very grave one for the immediate Norway spruce in the Middle West. The Dutch spruce, the wood of which is used in violin making and the pulp, formerly, in spruce, beer, has short, stout, pale, translucent leaves, while the Colfax of the Rocky mountains is slender and of a dark green or yellowish-green cast.

The Norway spruce supplies the best grades of Christmas trees. The less expensive kinds are usually those of inferior form. In fact the white pine with its feathery branches of fine, in the South the scrub pine with needles in pairs and in the West the well-known lodgepole pine are the principal species.

Much more used for Christmas trees, if for no other reason than that it is much more widely distributed and much less valuable to the lumber, the small, scraggly jack pine and its numerous related species.

As for the hemlock, it is one of the noblest of the evergreens. Most of the southern stand on the edges and sides of forest lands, holding territory the farthest north, the eighteen up the mountains, the deepest into the recesses and lower, and other unusual lands that the broad-leaved summer trees have no use for. But the hemlock contents with the forest of the hardwoods, the highest type of northern forest in the world is the hemlock-hardwood forest of Michigan. It flourishes also where the forest is mostly spruce, both instead of pines—spruce, the hemlock goes with the hardwoods. The "hemlocks" of which German children sing at Christmas is a hemlock.

The German "Tannenbaum" is similar to the English word to "fan," for the back of the hemlock is one of the best sources of tanning material, and indeed was for many years the thing for such use, but was finally replaced by that of the hemlock, while fairly strong, is rather soft and pulpy, but nevertheless is in the world's trade for pulp. Hemlock is also used for lumber, and is considered a rather valuable lumber tree. The "fruit of hemlock digest I" the dark" of Shakespeare's Hamlet, and the cup of poison hemlock that was the instrument of Socrates' martyrdom, have nothing to do with our hemlock tree. They are the poison hemlock, or conium, an evil weed belonging to the parsley family and the same "hemlock" attained up it is a base that is considered a rather valuable lumber tree. Record Telephone Call Sent Over the Oceans

The longest commercial telephone call on record, from Reidsville, N. C., to Sydney, Australia, was announced by the American Telephone & Telegraph company as having been made through its new overseas telephone service. The connection covered a distance of some 11 or 15,000 miles due to the time differences between the two points the operator for the trails talked at about 2,000 a or on the world. Usually morning, when the words reaching the listener at Reidsville, a fraction of a second later as 10:00 a. m. Melbourne, there.

The full word by wire from Sydney to the most radio station. There it was amplified and sent to London where it was switched to one of the regular transatlantic circuits and forwarded to New York through the Bell overland system at Moultrie, Maine, and was thence sent by land lines to Reidsville.

Proof of Tuberculosis Revealed by the Nails

The discovery of The Result Journal of tuberculous infants is an index to the progress of the disease, according to a well-known physician. Nail changes were found in every one of fifty cases of the disease. Under the microscope of an ophthalmoscope and normal nail bed is seen to be smooth and pink, but in cases of pulmonary tuberculosis there is a loss of the normal pink color. Instead of being smooth and glossy, the nail bed is rough and dull, and the nail itself is curved. Tuberculosis specialists of the medical and surgical clinics of the University of Pennsylvania have confirmed the findings of the physician.

SPORT NOTES HERE AND THERE

By Newman

The high school opens its basketball season with a game at Traverse City tomorrow night. It seems at the present writing what the local team is to be composed of Howard Davenport and Victor McSmith at forwards, Norman Ance at center, and Joe Arvidis and Victor Smith as guards. When the team goes to Traverse Coach Sykes will take three subs and a few capable substitutes along. We have no real, reliable dope on the opponents, as this is the first game for either team, but we figure that the game will be hard fought and the result close. A week from tomorrow the Red and White plays Petoskey on the local court to open the home season.

The Polar Bears won again Monday night, but that was to be expected. While they are waiting for the Kalamazoo game, they will make a trip to Central Lake to repeat the trimming they handed the downstaters on last year.

We hear a rumbling in the distance to the effect that the Polar Bears are going to receive a challenge soon to defend the championship of the region against an opponent that is worthy. About two weeks ago, the locals beat the Petoskey Crescent Trade by the score of 29-7 in a fast, exciting game, last week the Boyne City Indians opened up on the Cummins and rubbed them 47 to 7, a difference of 41 points. It was a free scoring contest as the score shows. When Boyne City came to town the report of the game had to be decided according to the type of game played. If Charlevoix can make it a fast, scoring game and save possession of the ball, the locals are sure to win, but if the game should turn into a wild scoring spree, then we figure the chances will be 50-50.

A friend of mine came up to me last week and casually said that Victor was playing in the high school team. I said I knew it and that the team was looking to have such a good team. The friend then asked why I had left out Vic's name in the write-up, and I told him I was tired of repeating the same old thing, so I decided to shake the blame to another guy, and said I was sorry. But you know how it is, when there are a lot of names in a row, you can hardly put one when you are copying it and forget one. Anyway, I'm sorry, and I'll promise that Vic will forgive me. He has played on the team before and deserved as much publicity that he can afford to overlook one or two mistakes on our part. Besides, Vic is probably too busy a man to even read such nonsense as this column is liable to contain.

During a football game last fall on of the local players bust an ankle. He limped around a while trying to get it to last him to play the rest of the game. We happened to hear a spectator say that player didn't really get hurt as bad as they made believe they did. We bet that spectator had never played football in his life, but he was good to criticize one who did for getting hurt.

A young man in this town who thought he was good enough to play on the Polar Bear team, but was not selected as one of the first eight for the game, is now making a bluff that he can get a team of players in Charlevoix who are not selected at all who can with a month's practice beat the Polar Bears. If there is anyone who would like the chance to play the Polar Bears just communicate with the Old Kid and he will refer you to the gentleman that is organizing the team.

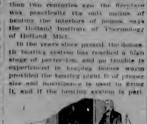
First Iron Stove Made in America

Modern Air-Conditioning System Goes Back to Franklin's Invention.

Prior to the invention of the cast iron stove by Benjamin Franklin less than two centuries ago the fireplace was practically the only means of heating the interiors of homes, says the Holland Institute of Technology of Holland Mich.

In the years since passed the demand for heating system has reached a high stage of perfection, and no trouble is experienced in keeping warm homes provided the heating plant is of proper size and maintained in good working order.



Tremendous Advances Have Been Made in Home Heating Since Benjamin Franklin Invented the Cast Iron Stove Less Than Two Hundred Years Ago.

Pittsburgh, which is in the heart of the soft coal region, has been a leader in the movement to smoke abatement, and has made wonderful progress in the last few years. Electrically operated air propeller mills, which force the smoke down into the fire box, are now in use in many of the steel mills and other industrial plants, and in addition to this, the use of smokeless fuels is being encouraged.

Recently it was discovered that on the average throughout the year there are each day five to seven days of sunshine, 15 to 18 days of cloudiness, and the remaining days are partly cloudy. Therefore, it is possible to use the sun's heat to a great extent in heating homes, factories, apartments, garages, greenhouses, poultry plants, and greenery on the farms.

Industrial plants, chemists and heating engineers and experts on the roof with the purpose of using the sun's heat to cause oil to burn more freely and with less amount of fuel.

Franklin's invention that set the stage throughout the next three centuries for the present day heating system, was the first cast iron stove ever made in America. It is in the warm-air heat principle, and the stove, as Franklin described it, was "a close stove, with fire in a hearth in the room, and flues to carry the smoke behind the backs of the people in the room, and warm them, before it goes out at the chimney."

Ten Thousand Lives Lost Annually on Account of Fire

At the close of each year ten thousand lives is the toll of fire. Seven will have limited to death and 37,000 will have suffered serious injuries on account of fire according to the Holland Institute of Technology of Holland Mich. Fire statistics reveal that the total annual loss by fire is appraised, nearly 10,000 lives are the cause of deaths to injuries is approximately two billion dollars.

Of this needs 53 persons will be burned to death and 87 will be seriously injured in fire within the next 24 hours. While only a portion of these losses occur in homes, 30% has been estimated that more than 60 per cent of the fire losses could be prevented by changes in construction and by the exercise of more care. Fire is a home fire every four minutes.

Records disclose that on the average throughout the year there are each day five to seven days of sunshine, 15 to 18 days of cloudiness, and the remaining days are partly cloudy. Therefore, it is possible to use the sun's heat to a great extent in heating homes, factories, apartments, garages, greenhouses, poultry plants, and greenery on the farms.

Industrial plants, chemists and heating engineers and experts on the roof with the purpose of using the sun's heat to cause oil to burn more freely and with less amount of fuel.

Franklin's invention that set the stage throughout the next three centuries for the present day heating system, was the first cast iron stove ever made in America. It is in the warm-air heat principle, and the stove, as Franklin described it, was "a close stove, with fire in a hearth in the room, and flues to carry the smoke behind the backs of the people in the room, and warm them, before it goes out at the chimney."

JUNIOR PLAY

The Juniors gave their play, "The Queen Hinge High," last Friday evening at the gymnasium. There was a good crowd and everyone enjoyed the excellent entertainment.

The twins, taken by Esther Brady and Ilus Gonst, were very lively and modern characters. We don't blame Hugh and Dagmar for the mutual attraction and wonder about Tat McCall and Howard Davenport off the stage? Page Ole Neilson, somebody! He's liable to know. Gladys Meggison certainly made a sweet Eunice, and we like Lest Erlington as a sometime angry, but usually considerate and kind head of the house. We wonder if he will be like that twenty years from now? Don't crowd, girls!

We wouldn't mind having such a sweet, if somewhat spunky, Grandma such as Ulaine Johnson made; Ivan Hall, Lucien Ralph Lehnert, as the Mr. Derby with whom Bernard finally throws his financial future, made an altogether gallant gentleman.

Mary Holowell as Mrs. Mordock was very stunning in her white and black outfit, and we sympathized with Emma Alma Seth Kerr, who wanted to go to New York but had to stay home, just as Hugh did. Ruth Hamilton made a charming Rhoda, don't you think so? Richard Mooney as the colored porter also brought the house down. We liked Norman Ance in a derby almost as well as in football togs.

It was an exceptionally nice play: interesting, clever, and well acted. We think the Juniors have reason to be proud of their success; also Mrs. Howe who made such a fine presentation possible.

JUNIOR HIGH BASKETBALL

The boys in Junior High have been practicing basketball regularly and the prospects for a good team are very bright, Mr. Bingham says. The team expects to play the usual games with Boyne City and other nearby schools. Good luck, Junior High!

Miss Ferneau—I am not going to call on anybody this morning but will ask for volunteers.

Mr. Smith—"That's good now she won't disturb my sleep.

JUNIOR HIGH CHRISTMAS PROGRAM

The pupils in the Junior High are preparing their annual Christmas program to be given Thursday, December 18th. The program consists of a one act play "Christmas in the Old Town." The pupils taking part in the play are: Sheila Partridge, Ina Howe, Vivian Pike, Lewis Stevenson, Theo Jeffrey, Keith Nickerson, Ernestene Nickerson, Marie Ikens, Helen Loskot, Esther Neilson, George Bellinger, Marie Hansen, Herman Meyer.

Christmas carols will also be sung.

DEBATE

Charlevoix negative team was scheduled to debate with Petoskey last Friday afternoon at Petoskey but will be no debate because Petoskey has forfeited the debate to us, since they have been ineligible in the league. This add 4 points to the 7 which the affirmative has already won.

We hope that in the closing preliminary debate on January 20, there will be a full and enough remaining points to assure them entrance into the eliminations.

ELEMENTARY SCHOOL CHRISTMAS PROGRAM

The Elementary School is presenting a production of exceptional merit for its annual Christmas play in the gymnasium, December 17th, at 8:00 o'clock.

The original thought was that, of all possible Christmas programs the real Christmas story was alone worthy of study, time and effort, and the phase of Christmas celebration needing emphasis rather than toys, gifts and feasting. The Bible Story of the First Christmas was selected for dramatization.

The characters were chosen after careful tryouts for the leading and exceptional comprehension of the parts.

The Greek	Leo Smith
The Servant	Jimmie Hilke

Each grade will sing its favorite Christmas Carol.

The play is under supervision of Miss French, Miss Phillips and Mrs. McKee.

DAMROSCH PROGRAM

Friday morning the 4th, 5th, 6th grades, the training room, and the county normal listened to the Damrosch program in the music room.

We have been studying the Wind wind chest, and the instruments illustrated in our concert were the Violin, Violincello, and bassoon.

The first part of the program was as follows:

1. Scotch Idyl, from Henry VIII.
2. Minuet.
3. In the Village, from Canzonian sketches.

The Dungeons of Alcoula, from Carmen.

The second part illustrated the sounds or characteristic movements of animals.

Three programs are presented in a series of four, one program being suitable for the Primary grades, one for the 4th, 5th, and 6th, one for Junior High and one for the Senior High. There is a five minute lifetime between programs to accommodate all things, and those that will feel especially interested in the program are coming in very well, and Mr. Damrosch's remarks are full of very interesting comments. Two questions are placed in the observers' notebooks and the selections discussed before the concerts. After hearing the program the test questions are answered.

The third program was one in Jackson, serving the term imposed by the Junior when they appeared in his court Saturday, when they will have ample time to reflect on the criminal trail made by them in recent weeks.

B. A. HERMAN PASSES IN ARIZONA

FORMER CHARLEVOIX BUSINESS MAN

Word was received here last Thursday of the death of Mr. Byron A. Herman, who for eighteen years and until recently was a resident of Charlevoix, where he owned and conducted the Central Drug Store, which was purchased by Ueda and Kirby.

He was born in Germany fifty-five years ago and came to St. Joseph, Mich. when five years of age and until recent months, has remained a resident of this state.

Due to failing health, he retired from business and more recently has been living in Arizona.

He was married about one year ago to Miss Elizabeth Scoffie, to whom he is survived and who was with him at the time of his death.

Mr. Herman has many friends in this region who will regret his passing.

"God the only Cause and Creator" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Christian Science Churches on Sunday, December 7.

Among the citations which comprise the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people." Matt. 4:23.

The following service also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "When man is governed by God, the infinite Mind, he understands all things, man knows that with God all things are possible. The only way to this loving Truth, which heals the sick, is found in the Science of Christ, Truth and Love demonstrated by Christ Jesus" (p.108).

Volume 61 — CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1930 — Number 35

JUDGE GILBERT GAVE SENTENCE

YOUNG OFFENDERS DRAW FROM 7½ TO 15 YEARS

At a special session of Circuit Court, with Judge Payne C. Gilbert on the bench, Arthur Parker, William McGuire and Clark Ferby, three young lumjits, self confessed and guilty of several robberies and holdups in regional territory, were sentenced to serve from seven and one-half to fifteen years in Jackson prison Saturday.

They have committed numerous offenses, mainly in Antrim, Charlevoix and Emmet counties just prior to November 22 when they were arrested and placed in jail by Sheriff Vac. Just following the hold up of a gas station and shooting of John Sinnott at Boyne City, who now is at his home recovering from the injuries received. Mr. Sinnott was taken to a Petoskey hospital for treatment, where he remained until a few days ago. Before leaving for his home to recuperate.

The three young men are one in a series of more than a dozen who have been arrested in this region in the last few months. With the exception of Parker, who is a native of Detroit, they were all residents of this section.

Prosecuting Attorney Leo J. Bresnahan, who handled the county's case in the trial of the three men, was highly complimented by the court for the able manner in which he handled the case.

Judge Gilbert, in passing sentence, said that he was convinced that the men were guilty of the crimes charged against them, and that the sentence he was about to impose was the least that he could give them under the circumstances.

Parker, who is 20 years old, was sentenced to from seven and one-half to fifteen years in Jackson prison. McGuire, who is 21 years old, received the same sentence. Ferby, who is 19 years old, was sentenced to from seven and one-half to fifteen years in the reformatory at Ionia.

WILLIAM J. GALLAGHER PIONEER, DIES AT THE PETOSKEY HOSPITAL

For some time past friends of W. J. Gallagher have realized that he was far from being a well man while during later weeks his decline has been most pronounced, as a result when his death was announced Monday, there was no evidence of surprise amongst his relatives and friends, nevertheless the entire population of this region were severely shocked the news was released that he had passed away at Petoskey where he had been taken for treatment some ten days earlier.

Mr. Gallagher, for nearly three score years has lived on Beaver Island and was throughout this entire period one of the leading local citizens and for many years prominent in State affairs, well known throughout the entire commonwealth and recognized as a public leader in common affairs and political life; a man of more than ordinary ability in analyzing public condition and affairs of the world, he was careful, unbiased and painstaking regardless of the proposition, large or small, of the proposition at hand. With all of these he was an unerring judge of every day life and this he exported in his associates. That he met with many disappointments can not be denied, however he was not, neither did he on this account lose faith in his fellow men.

Mr. Gallagher, nee James William John, was a native of Beaver Island. He was born in New York City, March 4, 1856, son of John P. and Bridget Gallagher, natives of Ireland, who settled in New York a few years earlier, and where the subject of this article received his early education. He resided on Beaver Island for many years, engaged as an Indian trader and fur buyer, and a considerable portion of this time was spent among the Indians of the Upper Peninsula.

Upon the completion of the Charlevoix-Petoskey railroad, Mr. Gallagher removed to Petoskey, where he has since made his home. He was a member of the Catholic church and a charter member of Petoskey Council, Knights of Columbus.

Surviving the deceased are his widow, who was formerly Miss Elizabeth Scoffie, to whom he was married about one year ago; Miss Elizabeth Gallagher, of Petoskey, a daughter by a former marriage, and one brother, Peter Gallagher, of Beaver Island.

Funeral services were held at Petoskey Thursday morning at 10:00 o'clock from the Catholic church, Rev. Father Fitzpatrick officiating. Interment was made in the family lot in Petoskey cemetery.

POLAR BEARS WIN ANOTHER

DOWN CENTRAL LAKE TUESDAY—ALL SET FOR KAZOO

The Polar Bears added another victory to their string last Tuesday evening and won at Central Lake when they humbled the enemy team that represented that town. Although the local boys were forced to abandon most of their powerful scoring play, due to the small size of the playing court, they nevertheless were able to win decisively. This was Central Lake's first defeat on its own floor since the Polar Bears invaded that locality a year ago. You can thus see that although Central Lake has not have any championship team that they are pretty tough to beat on their own floor.

Surpassing their opponents in dribbling, basket shooting and defense, to say nothing of the marvelous teamwork, which could not be used advantageously on the small floor, had to trouble at all in winning the final score in the game was Charlevoix 32, Central Lake 13. The difference was a matter of only nine team points. Rarely game the locals began to function better and aim by larger score. In their first game of the year the Polar Bears won by the two points, the second game was won by seventeen, and this one by nineteen.

The following players participated in Charlevoix's victory as follows: Forwards Livingston 10 points; Reuben 11; Cooper 4, Klyke 8; Superman 2; Defense Joseph 2, Hitz 2, Hayes 1, and did their full share of work on the defense were Ross, Wagner and Gee.

In spite of the Polar Bears record so far this season, we doubt if there is any contest next Tuesday evening when they announce the lineup for the Kalamazoo All-Stars at the floor. We figure that this will be the best game so far played this year. The locals will be at their very best and will not give the big boys any letup. The Polar Bears always feel sorry to play their neighbors' teams, very hard but they have no compassion scores. However, we expect Kalamazoo to have something to say for itself. The preliminary affair figures to be the best so far played on the court with the Cubs against the Petoskey Bears. But the main game is by far the most important attraction.

COUNTY BANK ELECT OFFICIALS AND DIRECTORS

At a meeting held December 15, attended by the organizers of the Charlevoix County Bank, directors for the financial institution were elected. The board of directors is comprised of the following: M. A. Levinson, L. S. See, Robert Bridge, J. M. Fader and F. J. Hiller. Following the selection of the board of directors Mr. F. Bridge was made president of the organization, L. S. See, vice president; Robert Bridge, Cashier and George C. Beeman, assistant Cashier.

It is probable that the same corps of accountants, bookkeepers, etc. will remain the same as at present, as no contemplated change has been reported in the personnel of the official force.

BRIDGE PARTY

The regular weekly bridge and public party at St. Mary school drew its usual big attendance. Monday night and from reports was a pronounced success. Captain John N. Chambers walked off with the drawing prize—Robert McKenzie and Mrs. Charles Zeller were pronounced winners in the radio contest. Honors at bridge were awarded to Hugh Mayne and Mrs. Mary Bronecky.

AIR MAIL SERVICE TO BEAVER ISLAND

According to Postmaster George W. Weaver, St. James and Beaver Island residents will receive mail twice weekly throughout the winter months via the airway route, this to be handled by Hammond Flying Service Company, of Owosso. Until this service is opened it is probable that the S. S. James II, Captain John N. Chambers, under a special government contract will continue to carry mail to St. James at frequent intervals, or when weather conditions are not to hazardous to attempt navigation over the Charlevoix-St. James route.

LARGE SHIPMENT

An express shipment of 2115 boxes of whitefish was made from the local Express office Wednesday morning by the Booth Fisheries, all going to one Eastern concern. The net weight of the fish aggregating 30,000 pounds and makes for the largest express shipment ever taken through the local office so made by the Booth Fisheries during the many years they have been in business.

RED AND WHITE WIN FRIDAY AT TRAVERSE IN SEASON'S OPENER

The local high school basketball team opened its season's schedule in an auspicious manner last Friday evening when it defeated Traverse City's strong combination in a hard-fought game by the decisive score of 15-6. The game was featured by clean guarding on the part of each team and a number of long toss-backs from the middle of the floor.

Opening the game the Charlevoix were Captain Bill Nixon at center, Ed McCall and Norman Ance at forwards, and Victor Mahaney and Victor Smith at guards. Howard Davenport was substituted during the second quarter for McSmith. Three of Traverse City's regulars were retained from the previous season, and the other two players were big, lanky boys who knew their stuff. And, in fact, Traverse is a school in class B, with nearly a large enough enrollment to be classed in the A group, yet readers can easily figure it out for yourself that Charlevoix did not last year accept the championship game. In fact, Traverse City had been favored to win the game, but the return to the eligibility list of Norvak and McCall inspired the rest of the players to outdo themselves and outplay Traverse.

In the opening period of the game there was only one basket scored by either team, so close was the guarding. Traverse City's Al Bigelow, center, Wahl, made a counter from right under the basket, reaching high above the hands of Charlevoix guards. The score at the first intermission was Traverse 2, Charlevoix 0. The Traverse City player accounts it by saying: "The deadeye Norvak never attempted a shot in this period." Both teams made one basket and one free throw apiece in the second period. McCall made a basket from close under the hoop, and Ance made the free throw to make Charlevoix's total at the half 3. Traverse City had 3 points at that time.

We don't know just what happened in the third quarter, but it was during this period that Charlevoix went into its stride and began to function as a unit. Ance made a field goal from the center of the floor, and Nixon followed suit with a similar goal. Then Ance made a free throw, and Nixon duplicated with another field goal. Traverse City was unable to score during the third quarter, and Charlevoix ended the period with a 9 point lead.

The last period was a repetition of the third. Traverse City's guards were unable to solve the passing attack of the Charlevoix forwards, and Nixon and Ance made the three counters that gave Charlevoix the victory. Traverse City's lone score came from a free throw by Bigelow.

Following the game the Charlevoix team was entertained at a banquet at the Methodist church by the Ladies' Aid society. Mrs. Ralph Loucks was in charge of the affair, and the tables were prettily decorated with Christmas colors and greens. Mrs. Loucks was assisted by Mrs. Harry Adams, Mrs. Lena Orlowski, Mrs. Virginia Edgell and Mrs. Jessie Bennett.

The Charlevoix fiddle and horn orchestra, composed of Ed Bennett, Jr., Lawson, Frank Adams, Arthur Weidner, Mrs. Lena Orlowski, and Mrs. Virginia Edgell, furnished the music.

The next game for the locals will be at Kazoo, Indiana from 1929, on Friday, December 26th. Following this game the locals will play Kalamazoo Central on January 2nd, and Battle Creek on January 3rd. That the fund on hand will be sufficient to carry the team through the winter months is anticipated by the committee in charge of athletics, but any donations to augment the treasury will be appreciated. Any or all of the following contributions will be accepted: Mrs. E. Bennett, Mrs. Ralph Loucks, Mrs. Lawson, Frank Adams, Arthur Weidner, Mrs. Lena Orlowski, Mrs. Virginia Edgell and Mrs. Jessie Bennett.

The following folks are now in the treasury, Infants from 1929, Mrs. Dr. Dunnings from Jed's Charity Ward, Mrs. Ralph Loucks, Mrs. Lawson, Frank Adams, Arthur Weidner, Mrs. Lena Orlowski, Mrs. Virginia Edgell and Mrs. Jessie Bennett.

Any donations to the above fund will be appreciated. Any or all of the following contributions will be accepted: Mrs. E. Bennett, Mrs. Ralph Loucks, Mrs. Lawson, Frank Adams, Arthur Weidner, Mrs. Lena Orlowski, Mrs. Virginia Edgell and Mrs. Jessie Bennett.

COMMUNITY CHEST DRIVE

COMMITTEE OF SEVEN WERE APPOINTED

Following a community meeting held in the city hall on Monday evening it was decided to put on a campaign for funds with which to carry on the activities of the community chest. This action was taken after a committee appointed to investigate the matter reported that there were no other organizations in the city that were doing anything along the lines of community chest activities. The committee is headed by Manley Adams Sturgeon and the following: Mrs. E. Bennett, Mrs. Ralph Loucks, Mrs. Lawson, Frank Adams, Arthur Weidner, Mrs. Lena Orlowski, Mrs. Virginia Edgell and Mrs. Jessie Bennett.

Any donations to the above fund will be appreciated. Any or all of the following contributions will be accepted: Mrs. E. Bennett, Mrs. Ralph Loucks, Mrs. Lawson, Frank Adams, Arthur Weidner, Mrs. Lena Orlowski, Mrs. Virginia Edgell and Mrs. Jessie Bennett.

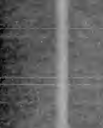
Fails Train Wreck

Bloomington, Mass.—Nineteen inches of snow and a drifting gale failed to prevent Alton Monahan wrapped a red-and-white pom-pom from making its ten feet of a railroad fence.

Self-Confidence

By Thomas Arkle Clark
Dean of Men, University of Illinois

The story is told of Thomas Edison's early days as a telegraph operator. He was a delicate appearing young man and Alton Monahan wrapped a red-and-white pom-pom from making its ten feet of a railroad fence.



wistful shortage in those terms. Mr. Roosevelt, to whom the matter was referred, at once solved the problem.

"I'll carry the boss myself," he said, with modest self-confidence. And he had never seemed to hesitate to meet an emergency or a political or war out here?

I wanted Bill's view of the business problem, Coolidge. Jones is rather undressed personality, but he knows his business and he knows how to handle it. He never becomes cocky and looks beyond the immediate job to signal us to what he should do next. He keeps his eye on the ball and makes just when to steal second—and what is more to the point—how to do it. He knows that if he gets the pitcher sufficiently "up to the par" he can steal home. He has perfect self-assurance, perfect control of himself, and I have never yet seen him get caught. It will be a great asset to him when he gets out into the world—this self-assurance—if he does not overdo it.

Mistaken Judgment

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

All a person need do to get a fair idea of conditions in Charleston is to walk up and down such New York streets as Broadway and Nassau, Park and Fulton avenues. Somewhere between there should be a number of them. Almost all carry the air of spurious imitation.

There are, for example, the "cafes" of the native Charlestonians. The quality in these usually smelling almost not unlike a sewer, and the cuisine becomes no less ugly than cheap. These places are the successful joints at which enough that succeed are among the number of the well-to-do Charlestonians to keep going on long by the skin of the teeth in bad times and what it did. It is easy enough to spot them. Their tables are covered with oil cloth.

One thriving cafe in the lower end of town has a town hall out of which it operates an additional small cafe alone. In these places the food also is not appetizing, although Lucknow are delivered on the authority of a waiter who has been in the city. Fifty hearth-burns per day.

One of the best cafes shown in New York is from the office of Clarence J. Shoemaker, one of the tireless. The office is situated high above the center-field gate, with windows fronting on the ball field. Below and around the green carpet, carefully mowed and rolled by the groundkeeper, and the pavilion of Captain Huggins' club is the pride of Shoemaker's heart. He is small. If in a good situation, a position where there is a football game on, he can see everything in the ball park.

The manager is told of the best time every knowledge of baseball and he has won a deserved support of Tennessee Mountain Ridge, Ky., and Mayor Walker. In the possession of that combination for baseball and baseball and who also is a baseball fan. Mayor Walker is the best man to keep baseball out of politics. He has the confidence of baseball men and baseball fans. He has the confidence of baseball men and baseball fans. He has the confidence of baseball men and baseball fans

CHARLEVOIX SENTINEL, CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

Months of 1930 are encouraging.

According to W. C. Marsham, of the American Association of State Highway Officials, during this period 12,103 miles have been paved, 15,767 miles have received low-type surfacing and 9,261 miles have been graded and drained. Compared to 1929, this represents an increased mileage of 5,716.

At least $40,000 000, in addition to the regular working forces, have been employed on state systems alone. This road work is playing an important part in mitigating the effects of the unemployment situation.

The states, this year, have spent about $900,000,000 for roads, in addition to more than $100,000,000 for payment on bond principal of the former sum, 67.5 per cent was used for construction, 21.6 per cent for maintenance and the remainder for interest on bonds, purchase of equipment, etc.

States are turning their attention to the farm-to-market highway problem, recognizing that its speedy solution is essential to the organizing of agriculture on a sound and progressive basis. Nineteen-thirty, in the matter of roads, is moving grandly ever over 1929. During 1931 we should take a still longer step forward in providing rural areas with smaller-sized, year-round, paved systems of transportation.

MINNESOTA IN THE LIMELIGHT

The words gave unanimous approval to the award of the Nobel peace prize to Frank B. Kellogg, of Minnesota, who jumped into fame as the original frustrator of the Coolidge Administration, a distinction retained by degrees until he obtained the rank of one of the world's great statesmen. But it was different in the case of Sinclair Lewis, who was pulled out from America's archives and given the prize, because his wordy pleasant description of Main Street in a mythical Minnesota town, and then spanked the whole business by playing peeping Tom among the sections in the streets of the ghostliest village.

THE WAY IT WORKS

The voters of Oregon have just passed a law authorizing the creation of power districts to develop hydroelectric projects. Advocates of the bill asserted the voters that these developments were to be effected without cost to the taxpayers.

Twenty days after the election, the city of Portland is asked to appropriate $15,000 of taxpayers' money for a survey preliminary to taking advantage of the law.

"America's Girl Friend"

Of course that's Alice White, First Nation has chosen this title for the blonde star who will be seen and heard Saturday and Sunday at the Palace Theatre in her latest picture, "Playing Around," with a big cast including Chester Morris, William Bakewell, Richard Carlyle, "Peanuts" Ryan, Maurice Black, Lubal Bolisow and Sleep Champ.

"America's Girl Friend" is the perfect description of Alice White, says Mercyn Leroy, the youthful director of "Playing Around" and of many other successful pictures.

In the first place, she is just about the most popular girl in America today. She has the second largest fan mail in Hollywood—proof she's been a star for just a little over a year. And that's not all. When it comes to letters from female sex, she's far in the lead. Hundreds of thousands of fan-devotees and men feel that Alice White is just the sort of girl they would like to pal around with. She's pretty in a clever and chic, charming kind of way. In other words, she the girl friend.

And the next part of it all is that these wonderful fans of Alice White's are perfectly right about her. She is one screen actress who is just the same in private life as she is on the silver sheet. And she is the kind of girl who makes the ideal sweetheart, sister, mother, chum, cheerful, merry, radiant sparkling girl friend!"

When talk of her new title by First National officials, Alice laughed, bowed, and said with twinkling eyes:

"I accept the nomination!"

COUNTY CHAMPIONS IN CLUB WORK ANNOUNCED

The largest and most successful Boys' and Girls' 4-H Club Program ever conducted in Charlevoix county has been completed for the year 1930. When all was over it was interesting to note that in 1930 a total of 37 different Clubs carrying a membership of 262 Club Members were organized as compared with 25 Clubs and 184 members in 1929 and 23 clubs with 165 members in 1928. Then recognize that each Club has been responsible that each member knows how to conduct a real business meeting, how to speak in public, how to follow direction, how to select the best for the exhibit and finally makes a complete and accurate business account of the project selected.

Then again think of this army of 262 young boys and girls, studying a specific project, learning the latest and most approved from the agricultural college, a larger vision of real farm progress and through the many and varied contacts gaining those vital qualities that make for higher citizenship.

At the conclusion of every year the outstanding boys and girls are awarded County Championships as in recognition of their accomplishments they are eligible to attend the County Champions and projects carried.

CLOTHING CLUBS: 1st year—Tie Christensis Withers and Freda Greiner Charlevoix. Style Champion—Freda Greiner Charlevoix.

CANNING CLUBS: 1st year Champion—Florence Anderson, Bay Shore. 2nd year Champion—Grace Pusey, East Jordan. 3rd year Champion—Martha Reidel, Boyne City.

BEAN CLUBS: 1st year Champion—Robert Brechensen, Bay Shore.

DAIRY CLUBS: 1st year champion—Miles Hardy, Boyne City. 2nd year Champion—Adolph Eckardt, Charlevoix. 3rd year Champion—Carlton Smith, Charlevoix.

POTATO CLUB: County Champion—Robert Tarmer, Boyne City.

CORN CLUB: 1st year Champion—Howard Whaling, East Jordan. 2nd year Champion—Ivan Korthase, Boyne City.

PIG CLUB: County Champion—Carlton Ager, Charlevoix.

Already approximately twenty-five Canning and Handicraft Clubs have been organized for this Winter's Program. Projects point to another successful year.

Yours very truly,
R. H. Mellenthin,
County Agr'l Agent.

Two Historic Christmas Days

Washington and Lafayette at Valley Forge

Surrender of the Hessian Troops to General Washington

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ALL IN THE long drawn course for the observance on 1932 of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington it is worth a comment that the week which is to be followed by a nationwide celebration of the first week in the month of February, was the central figure in two of the most historic Christmas days in all American history.

One of them was in 1776 and the story of it is so familiar to all Americans that it needs telling here only to the extent that Washington and his Continental army headquarters and there perfected his plans for crossing the Delaware River the next day and attacking the British outpost at Trenton, N. J., held by a force of approximately 1,000 Hessians under the command of Colonel Rall, because he pertained that these Germans, long with their Christmas feasting and merrymaking, would fall easy victims to a surprise attack.

So two weeks of the afternoon of Christmas day found the first regiment marching away from Newton on the Pennsylvania side of the Delaware nine miles above Trenton, and headed towards McKonkey's ferry where Colonel Glover's Massachusetts fishermen-soldiers were to ram boats and launch them in the river, filled with floating cakes of ice. It was a cold, raw evening and a snowstorm set in. The wind was from the northeast and beat in the faces of the ragged, barefooted Continentals as they set out upon their desperate enterprise.

The crossing of the river began at six o'clock that evening. Washington had planned to have his entire army on the Jersey side by midnight and begin the march to Trenton by one o'clock so that he could attack the Hessians just before dawn. But the ice-filled river threatened to upset all his plans and some of his officers were for calling off the expedition entirely. Washington, however, insisted in carry it through and although the crossing took no less than two hours, it was finally accomplished and four o'clock in the morning found the army drawn up on the New Jersey side ready for the seven-mile march to Trenton.

In a way they would have preferred a snow breaking upon their backs, and leaving bloody footprints by the men as they marched. Two separate divisions of Washington's army, which were to cooperate in the attack, had failed to cross the river and his force consisted of between 2,200 and 2,400 men. True, Rall had only about 1,000 Hessians at Trenton, but if he partook discovered Washington's advance he could fight a defensive engagement until aid came from Von Donop at Bordentown or from Cadwalla at Princeton and Washington's little force would be crushed before it could reach Trenton across the Delaware.

Fortunately for the cause of American liberty, however, a gallop and an early in the morning by one of Rall's subordinates (the commander himself was sleeping off his Christmas celebration) did not go far enough and the Americans were at the outskirts of Trenton before they were discovered. Despite the surprise, the Hessians rallied and put up a stubborn defense for a short time, but it was hopeless. Rall was mortally wounded and died the following night. Twenty-two of the Hessians were killed outright, 23 as badly wounded as to be unable to escape and 918 were captured along with the colonel's American associates in their retreat across the river with their field pieces. Washington's loss was four wounded and one a man killed this spectacular victory was attributed by the discouraged patriots. Among "American gifts" the achievement at Trenton must be raised among the most splendid of all time.

But it was the next day of 1776 was a bright one for Washington and his fellow countrymen, the Christmas day of 1777 was correspondingly dark. The British had taken Philadelphia, the Continental army was but a shadow of a fighting force, a plot to remove Washington from command had been narrowly averted, congress was demoralized and the patriot cause was at a low ebb. Both for its substantive value and as a potential threat against Philadelphia, Washington had decided to make his army in Valley Forge from Whitemarsh where it was stationed at the beginning of December, 1777. So he took up the 20-mile march and again there were footprints in the snow stained with red, arriving at Valley Forge on December 19, the army took its position to the right and left of the slope of the rolling ground between which ran the valley. The lines formed the arc of a great circle, swung from the west bank of the Schuylkill to the southern face of Mt. Joy, its flanks protected by the river and the mountain.

And there the ragged, half-starved Continentals went into the winter camp which has made the name Valley Forge forever famous as a symbol of suffering and deathless devotion to a cause. To strengthen the army in making preparations for the coming of better weather, Washington offered a prize to the first squad to complete its cabins. As a result there were several days of feverish activity which quickly divested the wooded slopes of most of their trees and on Christmas day Washington in his orderly book noted that the army was hutted for the winter in some 1,000 cabins.

But not this statement bring up a picture of an army mostly housed in comfortable barracks, let it be recorded that the huts were little more than piles of logs thrown up hastily around holes dug in the ground, the spaces between the logs plastered with mud. The roofs were shelter but they were leaky and water poured in on the heads of their inhabitants as well as seeped through the walls, when they had had formulas of straight comforts to dig drains around the outside of the huts. The paddy-constructed fireplaces worked poorly and so much smoke poured into the dark, damp interior of the cabins as went up the chimneys.

Add to such a situation the misery of hunger and weakness and you have a picture of the horror that was Valley Forge. For the commissary of the Continental army, neglected by a vacillating and bickering congress, had fallen down on its job entirely. On December 23 the commander in chief wrote to the president of congress that out of about 11,000 men "we have by returns this day more than 2,000 unfit now for duty for want of shoes, and a proportion of these will be entirely barefoot." He also reported that on the same day the army had "not a single bullock at one brigade and not more than twenty-five barrels of flour." Few men had more than one shirt, many only the tatters of one and some none at all" owing to the loss of blankets wantonly used to set up all night by fires.

Under such conditions it is only too easy to imagine what Christmas dinner at the camp of the first Washington put his own spent in 1777 at Valley Forge. What food it there was was doubtless cut only to scant scraps that someone selfish, with enough and enough for the officers and comfort of those about in Philadelphia were feasting at the tables of hospitality on food on the block KDK by the name of the Washington and Lee at York, Pa., the members of the Continental congress were enjoying virtually the same comfort they were only doing polite to refuse the Congress of their soldiers in Valley Forge, but were nearing the lot of their harassed commander harder in directing every extension of his comfort of the campaign. Finally their solitude brought from him this scraping reply: "I can assure those gentlemen that it is much easier and less distressing thing to direct operations in a comfortable room by a good fireside than to occupy a cold, bleak hill and sleep under frost and snow without clothing and blankets."

Cuba Taking Part in Move to Save Forests

The international spread of the movement to save forests is to continue with the news that Cuba has just begun the creation of its first national park for the preservation and protection of native trees. The property is to consist more than 60,000 acres of tropical land a grass primeval hue. The province of Oriente, of the southeast tip of the island, is to provide the timberland. The land is covered more by native tropic trees, the mahogany, the Lignum Vitae, and the royal palm. The area is also rich with dramatic and beautiful scenery, which is to be preserved. Moreover, the national park is to be used for the study of forestry and conservation methods. Similar projects are under way in the United States and in many of the countries of the world, including those of the British Empire and nearly all countries of the United States.

The creation of a tropical park is an undertaking of unusual merit, as many of the tropical forests are rapidly disappearing. Between the land of the Caribbean and the Pacific ocean commercial interests have been cutting down the tropical forests for their valuable woods at a speedy, shocking rate. As the tropical forests are the natural home of many species of birds and animals, the destruction of the forests means the extinction of many species of birds and animals.

Long Five Days Spent on Rock by Fisherman

Long seems for one to stand all of five days and nights hanging to a rock in the ocean! That was the unique experience of Edward Mayhew, a fisherman. His boat was wrecked in a storm off the Jersey coast in a rock, but he managed to cling to it, getting out of it as the tossed sea, and for five days he was without food or water. Then he was rescued by a passing vessel. Was glad to get back to his home in Cape May, N. J., and his wife and children, who had given him up for dead.

A safe report comes that Reuben Green, an old time resident of Charlevoix, passed away at his home late Tuesday night. He is survived by his wife and two daughters, one of whom lives on Beaver Island and the other in Saginaw. We have been unable to learn the funeral plans.

Prosecuting Attorney Rollie Lewis and Mrs. Lewis are westward bound this week. They left here Wednesday with California as their objective. At the time of their departure they contemplated reaching Indianapolis on their trip by the way. They expect to remain on the coast two months, possibly no longer, returning home about the 1st. The safety trip will be made via the motor route.

BASKETBALL MEETING

C. COACHES AND REFEREES TO DISCUSS RULES

Last Saturday afternoon, eleven basketball coaches and referees representing seventy towns and cities in Northern Michigan, met in Traverse City for the purpose of discussing the new changes in basketball rules and regulations, and to discuss any more changes that should time to have made at this time.

They worked out a clear understanding of this year's rules, which will also time committee for action. Quite informative, but one thing good, then they could not agree on the problem of shooting games with one to toss. The acknowledgment that that is a real problem has been at the present time all over the state. The present way of deciding a tie by two teams to play extra periods of three or five minutes until one is ahead at the end of the period. That is not so bad during the game on the first day, but it is hard on the boys when they are playing in the tournaments at the close of the season, when they have to play one and sometimes two games a day. Then it frequently happens that two good teams fight each other to the point of exhaustion in the first game, and then the winner of that game is beaten the next day by an inferior, but fresh, team. That very seldom happens if only the regular four periods are played, but if, for instance, they are tried 10:14 at the end of the game, and each makes one basket in the first overtime period, each makes one free throw in the second, and each makes two baskets in the third, it is going to take a lot of playing to decide the game.

None of the officials seemed to think that one extra period was too much, but they agreed that any more was unnecessary and unwise. Some of the proposals were that the game should be declared at an end when either team should score. Another was that the referee should give the decision to the team that played the cleanest game. Another was that each player on each team should be allowed so free throws. Another was that the team that at any one time had had the most commanding lead should be declared the winner. There are good points to be said for each method, but as Coach Kipke says, each way shows the superiority of either team in only one department of the game. Perhaps a combination using all methods can be worked out. But if only one way is decided to be used, we personally feel that we have arranged the methods above listed in the best order for us. We believe that the team above 30 , and the last one about 5 to 10 . Of course we don't expect anyone to accept our opinions as the law, but we give it to you for what it might be worth in cleaning up the game.

SPORT NOTES HERE AND THERE

By Newman

It means that we made three mistakes two weeks ago when we listed the best prospects for making the basketball team of C. H. S. In addition to Mr. Vic. Smith, of whom we spoke last week, we also neglected to mention that Mr. Bill Novak and Mr. Bob McCall had a chance to win positions. The fact is that when we wrote the article that they had no chance, or so we believed, although at the present time it is rumored that the state athletic association was busily trying to even up matters for Charlevoix by making a long school a last-minute present of the services of "The Two Inelegibles." As you should remember, the boys were declared ineligible the day before the first football game, and the action drew put a stop in the team's style all season. Perhaps the association figured it could even matters up a little by suddenly announcing, just before the first basketball game, that the boys could play. At any rate, they played and their presence made it an improved team that out-and-defeated Traverse and work. We don't want to get too enthusiastic and maybe go crazy, so we'll stop on that subject.

The high school boys have got new suits this year and you can get a look tomorrow night at some pretty natural suits with white serpit on the front. To us they seem to be the prettiest the locals have ever had. The boys who are wearing them are Bill Novak, Bob McCall, Norman Aldrich, Vic Smith, Vic McStanley, Howard Davenport, Joe Arvella, Carl Beattie, and Emerald Chase. To the second team go the suits the organizers had last year, and the third team gets what the reserves used last winter.

And we must not forget to mention the famous Polar Bears. They play a bunch of former college stars now going under the name of the Alma-Saints-All-Stars. The game is next Tuesday night on the court. Admission 50 cents. The proceeds go to the Charlevoix Harbor improvement fund. This region and after winning four games in a row, finally bowed to defeat in his two teams to play extra periods of three or five minutes until one is ahead at the end of the period. That is not so bad during the

LOCAL RESERVES BOW TO ALANSON

The Charlevoix High School reserve basketball aggregation, under the command of S. E. Coleman, journeyed to Alanson last Friday evening and engaged in a scrap with the regulars from that upstate town. We don't like to admit it, but the fact is that the local boys returned to town, bearing the remembrance of an 18-8 defeat. The report is that the Charlevoix boys outplayed their opponents on the floor, but that they couldn't connect with the basket, which was too close to the ceiling and too far from the floor. Even on free throws, they had no luck.

Perhaps the local boys are suffering from an inferiority complex caused by playing against the Charlevoix regulars for a month. However the defeat was no disgrace to them as the team that defeated them by a score of 18-8 was composed of men who could shoot spots in their favor. Alanson has got a team this year that is certain to make itself heard from in Class D circles. Already they have defeated the big Pellston team, and they seem to be a well-working bunch.

Volume 61 — CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 25, 1930 — Number 36

Much "Applause" Acclaimed by Some New York Scribes

In America, success can come overnight.

The latest proof of this statement was found recently in the reception which New York newspaper critics, men and women who can "make" or "break" a show, gave "Applause," the Paramount all-talking dramatic sensation which is running at the Palace Theatre for 2 days on Saturday next.

As a result of the "raves" written by these critics thousands of people now and heard and wife planned to the talking-screen masterpiece in New York, where it had a long $2 run.

"Success overnight" goes to Helen Morgan, featured lead of this outstanding drama of mother-and-daughter love and to Rouben Mamoulian, sensational director.

Miss Morgan was cited for her mastery of pathos, her genuineness of character-portrayal and many other fine points. Mamoulian was cited for his courage in tenacity to new ideals, his startling demonstrations of revolutionary directorial technique.

No one in the film firmament doubts that Miss Morgan and Mamoulian are already established personalities in the talking screen world. They achieved the renown through one picture, their first, and they achieved it almost "overnight."

GERRIT J. DIEKEMA DIES AT THE HAGUE

WAS MINISTER TO THE NETHERLANDS

Gerrit J. Diekema, United States minister to the Netherlands, a native of Zeeland, died of pneumonia following an operation performed at The Hague last Saturday, announcement of which was received at Washington, D. C., and other points in the United States immediately following his death.

Mr. Diekema was seventy-two years old. His birthplace was Holland, Mich. where he has always maintained his residence and was prominently identified with all that was good and best for his home city in social civic and business affairs.

In politics a republican he became a leader not only in Michigan but in the United States, as well as an international figure.

He is survived by Mrs. Diekema, a son, two daughters, a brother and three sisters.

POLAR BEARS WIN FROM ALL-STARS

TURN BACK LAST QUARTER RALLY AND WIN 23-18

The Polar Bears were forced Tuesday evening to fight desperately to maintain their good standing in the ranks of the cohasset, but they were fairly able to turn back the rally of the Kazoo cagers in the last quarter to win by the close score of 23-18.

Charlevoix was represented at the start of the game by Ilene Davenport, Irwin, Cooper and Kyser. Sutherland replaced Cooper at the end of the first quarter. The Kalamazoo All-Stars possessed a surprising lineup as the State Champions of 1928, 1929 and 1930. They were playing for Harden Springs, but since that time they have gone to Kalamazoo College, and joined the independent ranks. Of course, Harden Springs fans were somewhat sorry how to see the game for old times' sake. Those who played were: McHale, Wyngarden, Grimes, Taylor, and Cornell.

Charlevoix took a commanding lead in the first half after the All-Stars had, by a fast play, made the first basket. The score was Charlevoix 10, Kalamazoo 6. Davenport from Grimes and a basket. Brown made two baskets, and Superior one, and Ilene sank a basket.

But in the second half, after the teams ran the score to 20-10, the visitors speeded up with a surprising attack that ran the score to 20-18. Each side made one more basket, and then Charlevoix held for the rest of the game, although the locals made a scare in it a few minutes. In this half, Irwin was high with five points, Davenport got four, and Kyser got one.

A new referee was introduced to the local floor in the person of Mr. Smith, of Bellaire. The general opinion seemed to be that he is almost as good as Hugh Mayer, by whose standard all referees in the city will hereafter be judged. Both of the scorers seemed satisfied with his decisions, and the only time when the visitors protested, "Ref" was in the fourth quarter, and later, looking it up in our own rule book, we found that he was right.

May you Christmas be joyful and the New Year be complete in happiness and Prosperity, is the wish of THE SENTINEL.

AIR MAIL SERVICE VERY HEAVY

FOUR TRIPS FOR A RECORD SATURDAY

Pilot E. C. Hammond in charge of the air mail and service records between Charlevoix and St. James found it necessary to make four record trips last Saturday in order to get the volume of mail from Charlevoix pontoffice to its destination, making for something of a record day way of airplane transportation over the route for a single day.

Arrangements are being made for placing an airplane in the service of greater carrying capacity than the present one is under consideration, and it may be pushed. But orders seemed satisfied with his decisions, and the only time when the visitors protested, "Ref" was in the fourth quarter, and later, looking it up in our own rule book, we found that he was right.

Mackinaw-St. Ignace Ferry Make Three Trips Daily

The schedule for the steamer maintained by the State ferries on the Mackinaw City-St Ignace route calls for three round trips daily. The first sailing from Mackinaw City is at following: Leave 7:30 a. m., 10:30 a. m., 10:00 p. m. Leave St. Ignace 9:30 a. m., 1:30 p. m. and 7:00 p. m. Central Standard time. Either ferry may possibly be made, but if delays be made at a late hour, about midnight.

WEATHER CONDITIONS PERFECT

"JUST RIGHT" IS THE UNIVERSAL SAYING

From Horse Nature, Santa Claus on the snappy and cool days just right type of weather conditions as known for the finest kind of winter. There is a moderate covering of snow on the ground and this gradually thawing during the clear days and cool nights, makes for supreme weather conditions. Highways in this region are perfect for motoring and automotive parties are taking a full share of enjoyment by covering long distances among friends and spreading Christmas Cheer. Never has there been in this season of the year enjoyed more weather conditions. In this regard Charlevoix and surrounding territory is perfect. "Just Right" is the universal pronouncement.

Spending Christmas with Relatives

Captain and Mrs. Jared Sanford will spend Christmas with their son, Attorney Joseph Sanford and family at Muskegon. They went to Muskegon Tuesday. Mrs. Sanford may remain for some time, making an extended visit, but the Captain will probably return before January 1st.

Mail Service by Airplane-Two Trips Weekly to St. James

Thursday of next week the first of a series of mail delivering contracts between Charlevoix and Beaver Island will be made to St. James on a schedule to be followed by two weekly trips over the air route between Charlevoix and St. James, during the winter period.

In past years the service between The two terminals has been closed until the opening of navigation, but it has been a source of annoyance to the postal authorities as well as people stationed on Beaver Island residents and persons potentially having business with outside points. It is considered the use of the mail service to conduct satisfactorily.

C. H. TOSSERS BEAT PETOSKEY

GAME NOT DECIDED TILL FINAL WHISTLE, 12-10

Teams representing Charlevoix High School won two victories on the home floor last Friday evening when the first team clashed with the local Petoskey eight of the latter's reserves ran away with the game when they met Petoskey's seconds. The first team game was somewhat unusual because neither team made a single substitution in it. Five boys from were who started at the game, Novak, Smith, Amos McKinley and McCall represented Charlevoix, and Petoskey's team was composed of Johnson, Porter, Nickerson, Porter and Hacker. Nethaway was the outstanding star of the win the team scoring 6 of the team's points. Also all four Porter boys got in the game, one of the others, Mrs. Julia Ann Hacker made 1. Charlevoix's attack was evenly distributed, with every man making at least one basket. Smith and Novak each made a free throw besides their baskets, and led the team in scoring with points apiece. McCall, Amos and Smith each got 2 baskets apiece.

It seemed to the writer that the Red and White team was far superior on floor play, but that their shots, at least the majority of them, just would not go in. Practically every local had some good set shots, at least the majority of them, just would not go in. Practically every local had some good set shots, at least the majority of them, just would not go in. Practically every local had some good set

Women Grow More Shoe-Conscious; Knitted Fashions Now in the Lead

A "LADY" is known by the shoes she wears, and we are greeting new shoe-creations with open pocketbook session. Verily, to that crowning of loveliness adieu to shoes there is no end. Recently at a showing of kid fashions frequenting with interesting accessories, to which twenty-six prominent retailers contributed, very handsome and fifty pairs of shoes were shown, and no two pairs were exactly alike.

Fifteen pairs carried a similar plan, compared with distinction of the pairs. Nevertheless a greater variety of types were shown than ever, due to a difference in the manner of fastening. Tyrannously, when they were in vogue, were pumps with one strap, but now the fad has become buttons at the waist, opened with one of those buttons that seem always to be open or unfastening into straps.

Edward and Frederick opened a shoe-specialist and pioneer on the shoe-open movement. They showed several very handsome shoe creations in suede and kid, with flower fad.

Contributing to the evidence to the glee of the shoe-of-flower fad is the dressy-looking, practical shoe, shown in a combination of black satin and kid trimmed in buckskin. The buckskin part of the shoe is made of buckskin, and the uppers are obviously for formal afternoon or evening wear, are no longer cut out into three in the composition of straps left to make the vamp. Another pair, less formal case in style, have just rather loose bands with a rather broad strap across the instep, handsomely worthy of the bronze and calling attention to its attractive.

The Fenton leather is so dressy in itself that ornamentation of shoes are seldom used, aside from the finished time one wears them and realizes, except on close scrutiny, that this or that wall or dress is actually knitted.

There is interest in knitted accessories, this week, as well as hats, and the rank of knitted pictures each piece it is a show-off in itself, as the wearer has the popularity of the knitted costume-knitting now being created.

When carefully handled, as in the instance of the fur-trimmed velvet suit pictured, there is nothing sweater-like about the new knitted fabrics. It's knitted, in this suit, and yet how dressy it gives the appearance of a well-tailored.

The big waistcoat, which is one of the dress items of this fall's wardrobe, is given swanky buttons. The sweater's effect is the new length and yet effective collar in of leisure for.

One may be as modishly correct or as gaily "sporty" as one chooses in knitted sweaters this season, with the latter showing a decided preference for the fancy-stitch types of garments. The wool yarns are the most popular for knitting, although some of the novelty yarns are also used. Bouclé yarns are also used in knitted sweaters, and the knitted suit is also developed in bouclé yarn.

Knitted wear is also developed in bouclé yarn. A jacquard dress of bouclé yarn is to be worn with a knitted jacket to match. Another bouclé dress is also given a sweater-and-skirt costume effect.

FASHION HINTS FOR WOMEN WHO CARE

You can modify your last season's silhouette by wearing a two-piece antelope hat with your best coat that carries forward another gracious heading and bonnet.

Mink has always been smart for coats but its use as trimming gives it new interest, as mink is readily understood for it combines as well with suede or kasha, the new browns and green—and black.

Country outfit is a term that has taken a popular one formly and correct to every day wear. A rough suede, harmonizing or close around the throat, gives it a military smartness.

Bodies, women of London say, a are the fad. Many are wearing an attractive blouse-bodice which is combined with a skirt or a jacket costume to fit their needs. The bodices are made of satin, velvet, lace or net and may be worn merely to blouse curtains.

Make Their Own Right of Way

Pittsburgh has installed at busy traffic intersections a device by which the pedestrian can turn on the red light that stops vehicles and permits him to cross the street in safety. Three little children are making use of the fourth-year-old boy pushing the button.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

The movies have long been taking stars from the stage. Now the stage is taking stars from the movies. It really is very simple. Theatrical producers said to themselves:

"Why not make the movies help rather than hurt our business? The movies have spent huge fortunes making the pictures of certain persons known to every city, town and hamlet. Naturally, the country in general would like to see these stars in person. So, one thing leads to an other, stroll along the street, take a cursibly call, come out the stage door. For that if one thing about a moving picture the stars are not losse-grown; they are exalted gods, and you can't meet them at the stage door after the show. So let's give the human element. There should be money in it."

So saying, the theatrical producers proceeded to make the road to Hollywood a roadway street. I suppose they talked to the movie stars of the thrill of appearing before an audience which paid to get in, rather than on sufferance of camera men who were paid to be there, of the sweet sound of applause of flowers hurled over the footlights, anyhow, there are a number of moving picture performers who are trying their hands at becoming actors and actresses.

There is a big difference in the two games. There are no rehikes on the stage. That is so interesting. There is a prompter, but no director with a megaphone. And the perfect thing must be done right after night, and cannot just once under pressured con

Christmas

The Miracle Season

By Florence Harris Wells

Let us go back over the centuries that we may see the soft Judean hills flooded with heavenly light; that we may behold the flaming star of the East guiding the three wise men, Melchior with flowing white hair and sweeping, snowy beard; Caspar, a beautiful boy, and Balthasar in the prime of life, symbolizing age, youth and middle age, bowing at the cradle in the manger.

THEY bring from afar their gifts of gold and frankincense and myrrh to the King of Kings, as the song of the heavenly chorus of angels on the plains of Bethlehem floods the air. The Master's touch worked strange miracles long ago. But let us now turn a simple dial and again a miracle has been wrought—even here as it was there so long ago.

THE room is full of sound. The air is charged with Christmas—always Christmas. Even the word is radiant with holiness. With the voices of the present are mingled those of the past. At Christmas man is at his best. It is the blest season of the year. The season of giving and receiving. The season of love reborn. It is the miracle season.

HAPPINESS is in the air. Laughter reigns. In the tongues of all nations voices are raised in greeting. The angels sang out their glad tidings of great joy above the plains of Bethlehem and as often as Christmas comes, the carols, music, bells, voices—all unite in a great singing circle sounding o'er all the world the glad words: A Merry Christmas!

Billy Gets a Christmas Flower for His Mother

By Martha Dowling Thomas

BILLY loved flowers, particularly red ones. From the moment he could toddle around alone, he had gone straight to Lo peonies in his mother's garden and pulled off all the heads. This was out of sheer love, not naughtiness. For, let it be understood, Billy was a kind little chap.

When Billy grew to be three years old he still loved red flowers, but he did not pull off their heads. He kept them tightly in his fist, and smiled with contentment. One afternoon his mother took him shopping with her. There were a few last things she needed before Christmas. Billy was enthralled by the gay shows and happy looking people. He chattered to his mother's side and looked at everything with all his might. Once when they were waiting to cross a street, Billy's eyes grew rounder than ever, for they were looking straight into a large red poinsettia in a shop window. He had never seen anything so beautiful.

The policeman's whistle blew. People streamed across the street. But Billy's mother found that her little boy had not come with her. Somehow he had stayed away. She left a policeman before the traffic light changed. "My little boy," she gasped. "I don't know where he is!"

Then she heard a clear call: "Mamma! Here's—a—present—for you!" Billy's voice. She and the big policeman looked toward the other curb. Wedged in between peoples legs and ruffles stood Billy waving a great red flower. His face was all smiles. "A Christmas present!" called Billy again.

His mother and the policeman made it safely to the curb. The lights changed. Traffic roared by. "I found it in a garden," said Billy, "right there!" A surprised clerk was looking out of the flower shop window.

"Thank heaven!" breathed his mother, "and thank you, Billy, for my present."

The policeman grinned and Billy's mother went to pay for the flower he had picked.

"He doesn't know any better. He thinks your shop is a garden," she explained. "I'll try to make him understand."

"Oh, that's all right," replied the clerk. "Merry Christmas, I'm sure!"

Billy's mother hugged the child with a prayer of thankfulness in her heart, and slumbered to think of what might have happened. "This is a Merry Christmas!" she smiled, and Billy wondered what the fuss was about.

THE CHILDREN'S LUNCH BOX

Where the child must carry a lunch at school, every effort should be made to make the food appetizing. Fresh fruit when it is possible should always be included. Figs, dates, Jelly, dried fruits such as figs, prunes and raisins or dates will help out when apples, oranges and fresh fruits are not available.

Fruit Paste. Thoroughly mix chopped dates, raisins, figs and finely grated nuts with orange juice and a little fruit. Spread generously on thin, buttered bread.

Quick Orange Jam.—Take two cupfuls of canned peas and juice, one lemon, juice and juice, and one and one-half cupfuls sugar. Boil ten minutes. Put into pint glasses and seal. Serve in sandwiches or with toast. A small glass of this jam makes a dainty addition to the luncheon box.

For a wholesome sandwich, spread one slice of thin buttered bread with orange marmalade and the other with cottage cheese. Put together and wrap in waxed paper.

Carrot, Celery and Nut Sandwich.—Mix ground raw carrots, celery and nuts with lemon juice and boiled dressing. Put the mixture into cakes made by scooping out a roll cut in half. Fit the halves together.

Egg Sandwich.—Chop hard cooked eggs, moisten with cream, force meat with salt and pepper, spread over a lettuce leaf, place on a buttered slice of bread. Cover with a plain buttered slice.

Party Sandwiches.—These should be served as soon as prepared. Mash pimento and cream cheese in an equal amount and moisten with sweet cream and a pinch of salt and a bit of sugar if desired. Spread while bread with butter, then with the fruit mixture. Put the slices together and cut into fancy shapes. If the fresh berries are not available, use raspberry jelly. If desired, especially festive, decorate the top of small sandwiches with bits of candied cherry.

Little Mary Knew All About Social Workers

Kari de Schweinitz, general secretary of the Family society, tells of a social worker who recently took Mommy and Mary, aged six and six, respectively, in her car to a hospital clinic for examination.

It was the first automobile ride for both the children, Mommy reported, and the social worker had to use considerable persuasion to get them out of the car. "Mary was brave, however, and Mommy's fears and children understanding has an added."—Philadelphia Record.

Bunche will visit the counties in which the tests are given.

Deadly Vivisection

The "Pasteur Vivisection" in the Swine Flu of 1918 is now published in the report of the committee appointed by the British Medical association to investigate the incidence of the vaccine known, before the name Influenza (Flu) was applied to Swine Flu, as "Pasteur Vivisection." The report is now published in Pasteur prime, and the death toll in 1918 and subsequent years was greater.

USELESS LAWS CAUSE LAW DISRESPECT

A recent educational tongue lost the last week in our state house as much to ridicule California prisons for the whole two years as it did for the next time years.

All over the United states governors, mayors, and the federal executive are perplexed by the growing, and in places, lethal lack of respect for the law. Gangsters and racketeers openly mocking at and a flaunt to put the stealth law of the land. Even the police are in distress and to the point the public will be forced to build more widespread and more efficient prisons.

Many reasons have been claimed for the breakdown but authorities have agreed that the fundamental cause is the multiplication of laws, many of them unenforceable, and the utter disregard of them by the people. The passage of the eighteenth amendment and the volstead act is generally credited as the first step in the present lawlessness.

There are thousands of persons in prison today because of some law which is "dry" law makes a crime. The reason for many of the murders that are now the greatest wholesale manufacturers of spirituous and vinous liquors which are forbidden by law. Some laws to control individual rights and liberties are broken by almost everybody.

Another cause which increases the vast number of newspapers readers has a strange quality. News of vast sin and crime is printed in such detail that one out of six individuals is either a criminal or a criminal in the making. Some of the methods of criminals are taught in the classroom of the moving picture.

Perhaps the most important reason for the present lawlessness is the fact that the people have lost confidence in their own party and the law, started in to make their own laws. Such was the case when the state of Senator Robinson they have to share their own courts and the amendment of Mooney Boyle, Borah, Nye, and other individual navigators.

WHAT IS NEWS!

Kent Cooper, general manager of the Associated Press, began writing on the paper which he was only a private clerk. He has seen many men of a small Indiana newspaper. Ever since the news has been his business and he has written it, edited it, printed it, sold it, and delivered it. Consequently he knows what news is.

Many times he has been asked to define what is news. He has always refused the invitation, for the answer seemed to him to be self-evident. But he has been asked often enough to realize that it is not self-evident to many other people.

Perhaps the simplest definition is that news is anything that is interesting to a large number of people. Of course, the number of people who are interested in a piece of news determines the importance of that piece of news. The more people who are interested in it, the more important it is.

The Associated Magazine recently published a list of questions to which it was said the greatest number of persons would be interested in having answered. Here are a few of them:

Is there any truth in the report that radium affords the occultist facilities for the study of the unseen?

Is there any truth in the report that the Soviet government has been using the Russian Orthodox church as an agency for the overthrow of the government of the United States?

Is there any truth in the report that Mussolini has been using the Vatican as a means of obtaining information about the secret of business deals?

Is there any truth in the report that the garments that have been worn by the Pope are infested with lice?

Is there any truth in the report that the Soviet government has been using the Russian Orthodox church as an agency for the overthrow of the government of the United States?

Is there any truth in the report that Mussolini has been using the Vatican as a means of obtaining information about the secret of business deals?

"You think that, Mastlerne?" I asked as we paused at the door of the elevator.

"Of course," he answered. "Doesn't Lord Tarn tell us why—or an excuse of being to be fairly certain of that? She knows—knows! And as I said to them—who is it? Here's one thing certain, Holbrit: she won't speak. I'll have to tell the police. But between now and tomorrow she'll have time to reflect. And in the meantime—"

He broke off abruptly. We went down and into the street and in silence walked quickly down Edgware road. I knew what he was reflecting. Confusion. And continuing secretly committed murder. I myself was in a state of the best mind out of the earth.

"It's Lord Tarn, Carruthers," he said. "Tarn is back in the house now. All I apprehend." Mastlerne suddenly then I observed together a moment, then Mastlerne and I turned away.

"But he can't! Mastlerne, how could he? I asked. "And that—that's in quite, it?"

"Circumstances of suspicion," answered Mastlerne. "Who could have known that Lord Tarn would be at Ascot? Who could have known that Lord Tarn would be at Ascot? Who could have committed murder there? Two, we know, were absent—Armstrong and Mastlerne and I turned away.

Mastlerne looked at me. "Carruthers, who could have committed murder there? Two, we know, were absent—Armstrong and Mastlerne and I turned away.

TO PRESERVE BOOKBINDINGS

Easily applications of dressings made of suitable oils and greases will add many years to the life of books, bookbindings, says chemists of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Start treatment when the bindings are new and repeat it every year or so. Apply only a thin film of dressing at a time and rub it well into the leather. Repeat applications at intervals of several hours, until no other has taken up all of the dressing that it will without becoming oily or soft on the surface. Leather will absorb more dressing and will absorb it more quickly, if put in a warm place. The temperature should never be hotter than the hand can bear. Leaflet 60-L, The Preservation of Leather Bookbindings, contains directions for treating bindings and several recipes for dressing leather dressing. It may be procured from the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

OYSTER STUFFING FOR TURKEY OR GOOSE

Take 1 pint oysters, melt ½ cup butter, and mix with it ½ cup of cracker crumbs, 2 teaspoonfuls of lemon juice, 1 tablespoonful of chopped parsley, and season with salt and pepper. Roll each oyster in the buttered crumbs, mix, and then fill the turkey or goose. The oysters may be chopped up coarsely and mixed with the crumbs, if desired. For a large fowl it will be necessary to increase the proportion of this recipe to obtain a sufficient amount of stuffing.

FROM CONSERVATION DEPARTMENT NEWS BULLETIN

Thirty-one thousand actual children and 21,000 adults viewed conservation motion picture films during the month of November, according to a report issued by the Conservation Department.

The extension libraries of motion picture films of Michigan's wild life and natural resources, which have been established by the department in the larger city school systems, accounted for the high record of the month's showings. The loan service of films loaned directly from the department's Lansing office, which offers Sportsmen's clubs, garden clubs, sportsmen's association and similar organizations, were responsible for the balance.

The total for the last month is 20 per cent over that of a year ago, the report said.

Carcasses of seventy-five deer, moose, and sixteen pieces of venison remaining in freight limit ten to one hundred pounds, have been distributed the past deer season. Much more was distributed locally without being recorded in the Lansing office of the Conservation Department.

Among the institutions which benefited were orphanages, county infirmaries, state hospitals, the Salvation Army, and others.

The majority of the venison sent to such institutions was confiscated from conservation law violators. Fifty-two does, 8 bucks, twenty-seven fawns, and 16 moose were among the carcasses on the confiscated list.

Photographs of this kind, because of their accuracy and because they can be used to illustrate the text in show contours, can be put to a wide range of usefulness. They are being used by the State Highway Department, Conservation Department, and other state departments now and they aid in forest fire control and prevention work, state park and game refuge planning, and are invaluable to the fact economic survey in those areas where the photos are taken to represent the use of the magnetic compass.

The Game Protection Fund is not an "hunters money" or Fishermen money" as all of any special interest according to percentage charts recently compiled in the Conservation Department.

The game, based on the receipts of the past two years, show that deer, bear, fox and small game hunting and trapping license make up fifty percent of this fund, fishing licenses both game and non-game, by far the majority of which is accounted angler's license fees, add thirty-five per cent, the balance is composed of miscellaneous revenues such as interest in bonds, the sale of outboard registry, e fees, fees derived from court convictions, etc.

Of the total of the Game Protection Fund, eighty-seven percent is derived from recreational sources, and fifteen per cent from commercial sources. Seventy-five per cent from Michigan residents and twenty-five per cent from non-residents.

Willie and Jack were two young sters, pugilistically inclined.

"Aw," said Willie, "you're afraid to fight; that's all it is."

"Naw, I'm not," protested Jack, "but if I fight, my dad'll find out and lick me."

"Why! He find it out, eh?" "Don't see the doctor goin' to your house."

A young lady who wanted to keep with the latest styles went into a dry goods store and called for a pair of rolled hose. The clerk was equal to the occasion—with a little to spare. "Have a wide one, miss," he said with alacrity, "we roll them free of charge."

Did the same, soaking it 6.6% at the half. The locals made it in the third, holding Petoskey scoreless, but The Red and White only made 2 in the last, and Petoskey made 4. Just two points difference between the two teams, half it meant victory for one and defeat for the other.

The reserve teams game was a good scrap, and due to the slippery Winfield Kilpa, ably supported by a strong cast, which included Dale McCann, Bill Clark, Bud Potter, Dan Rossett, Lisle Anne, Bob Foster, Herb Campbell, and Junior Soper now, Charlevoix won by the decisive score of 14-8. Charlevoix's aggregation was supposed to be a team, but due to young "Tinker's" ability to tie so many places at once, he practically stole the show from the rest, as did John Persons, of Traverse City, and Hugh Mayer, of Charlevoix, handled the refereeing jobs in nine games.

Between the halves of the main game, some high school girls put on a tap-dancing exhibition showing the downfall of Petoskey. The school Band played between halves of the preliminary, and during the intermission between the games. It made a very fine evening's entertainment altogether.

SPORT NOTES HERE AND THERE

By Newman

Well, what do you think of our basketball team now? Do you know of a team in Northern Michigan that can beat either of them? Some towns have good high school teams, and some have good independent teams, but Charlevoix has both.

The high school teams beat Petoskey twice last week, and at this writing (Tuesday morning) it looks as though the Big Reds will beat Kalamazoo tonight. But we are pretty certain that the Petoskey Bon-Tons are going to humble the hall boasted Lake Ax Peppers' Friday night, and themselves World Champions. They have got a game for tonight, we understand.

We will also practice some effective cheers to use when the high school team wins the State Championship next March.

If Santa Claus doesn't bring you any skates or skis, you might take our advice and get some anyway, for cause a little bird has whistled in our ear that there will soon have more weather for Winter Sports. Perhaps it was just the wind whistling. We can't tell the difference, anyway.

Heating Plant Not to Blame for Dust

By far the greater part of the dust and dirt that irks the housewife during the heating season comes not from the great out-of-doors, and not from the coal and ashes delivered by the Holland Institute of Thermology of Holland, Michigan.

According to the home through the cracks around doors and windows, and is carried in by the feet of the family. This is very understood now the time could easily be reduced to the requirements of an aircraft carrier."

There are still some cities and in our shipyards on the East and West coasts. There are some men who would like to work in them yards in building a couple of giants like this 73,000-ton Britisher, and there are many of us here in the United States who would like to see such a building program started, and soon, too.

CUNARD GETS BUSY

Following the construction of the great German liner Bremen and the planning of even greater ships for the merchant marine of the South Americas should be interested in the report from the London Times to the effect that the British Cunard line is to build a giant 73,000-ton liner for the North Atlantic trade.

Uncle Sam will have to keep on his toes if he is to keep up with the British in commercial matters. We doubt that Uncle Sam will keep on his toes. His merchant marine has improved greatly during the past few years and the air removed by the government in the way of long time loans and mail contracts, to American ships, through the Jones-White law has been the means of commanding on the progress of our merchant marine and the new announcement by the Cunard Line, Sir Irving Glover, Assistant Postmaster General says, quietly:

"Our ping-pong in this country on ships of a medium tonnage is now taking definite form in the way of building and will be followed to match the best on the North Atlantic and the Congress will go a step further in the encouragement to present Jones-White law, which will be the subject of much discussion when Bill in on a well rounded merchant marine plan, to move slow and now your forget, our ships would be definitely settled on the seas."

Mr. Glover further said it would be interesting to know just what part the British government would pay to the Cunard Line. "I have no doubt," he pointed out, it will be more than substantial. Its amount will not be unreasonably high. With us our cards are always on the table face up and the world knows what our mail subsidies are. It will be interesting to learn if our new giant British ship will be subsidized and if so, who assumes times think of naval parity, as fading out like the mirage it is. It is a certainty this new ship will have unquestionably passengers for 6-inch guns and other naval requirements, and as a high ton speed and with a superstructure which in two months time could easily be made over to the

In a snappy preliminary, the Petoskey Bon-Tons had an easy time in defeating the Polar Cubs. The Bon-Tons are one of Petoskey's best teams. The first half ended 8 to 6, Petoskey, and then the fast Beaver Arment went into the game. Charlevoix was held to one more basket, while Petoskey made eleven more points. The final score was Petoskey 19, Charlevoix 8. For Petoskey these played: Starmer, Hart, Dudek, DeArment, Conklin, Hinds, and Baines. For Charlevoix: Helms, Kirby, Sharrow, Smith, Crandall, Bergman, and Raley. The first four each made one basket apiece. "Cersie" McCall refereed a good game.

The Polar Bears will play Midland next Wednesday evening on the local floor. A good preliminary will be arranged. And on the eighth day of January, instead of the ninth, as has been erroneously reported, the Polar Bears will play the Muskegon Iron Works, the only team that defeated the locals on their own floor last year.

WILL CONDUCT SERVICE SUNDAY AT LONG CHURCH

Rev. G. Russell Parker, who was recently called to the pastorate of the Congregational Church is expected to be in the city Saturday and will conduct the services here and at Boyne City Sunday at the usual hours.

Mrs. Parker and son, Hugh, will remain in Watersmeet until the end of the school semester later in the month when they will join Mr. Parker.

The following is clipped from the Watersmeet record: "Mrs. Parker's going was entirely of his own desire and we believe we are not overstating the matter in saying that no minister ever left Watersmeet taking with him the sincere wishes of more people, both inside and outside his church than does Mr. Parker.

During his pastorate here his church has better than held its own in interest and influence, which in this day of varied interests is always a very high compliment. Mr. Parker's work has been characterized by a broad and tolerant spirit and by a sincere desire to help his fellowmen. He has been a leader in all movements for the betterment of the community and has always been willing to lend a helping hand in any worthy cause. Small Blizzard Struck This Section Tuesday

A blizzard of moderate proportions visited this region Tuesday night and continued throughout Wednesday. Some snow accompanied the wind and naturally filled some of the cuts but impeded traffic only to a slight extent. Temperature was high, ranging around 28° above.

Down in Arkansas a man was tried for assault and battery with intent to kill. The state produced as evidence the weapons used: a rail, a gun, saw, and rifles. The defendant's counsel exhibited, as the other man's weapons, a scythe blade, pitchfork, plane, dog, razor and hoe. After being out several hours the jury gave this verdict: "We, the jury, would have given a dollar to see the fight."

Mothers: "Come, Freddie, and kiss your Aunt Martha."

Freddie: "Why, Ma, I aint done nuthin."

PALACE THEATRE SATURDAY NEXT

JUST GRAND — "SHADOW OF THE LAW"

"Shadow of the Law" is the dramatic story about William Powell comes to the Palace theatre across for 2 days, starting Saturday next. A story of an innocent man's fight to clear himself before the law, the prize a fight with drama, action, suspense and heart-throbbing interest. It's a desperate struggle of one man against society.

Enmeshed in a net of circumstantial evidence, a young engineer is tried, convicted of murder and sent to prison for life. A strange woman and a strange break from jail is the only one who can prove his innocence. His escapes from prison and begins a desperate fight with time, closely pursued always by the menace of prison. Established in a Southern city, he falls in love with a beautiful girl, but his bitter past prevents him from declaring his love.

The role is played by the late Jack Holt, supported by the girl Fay Wray, Regis Toomey and Walter Miller.

Added attraction: Pathe News.

FOR 1931

We start the year with a pledge of greater service to the community, of greater effort in behalf of our customers, and, at the end of the year, we shall consider it a successful one if opportunities for service have multiplied and if the community, as a whole, has come to look upon this institution as a vital part in its development and well being.

LOSS IS HEAVY

CHARLEVOIX LUMBER CO'S PLANT RAZED

MIDNIGHT, DECEMBER 24TH

Loss Estimated at $7,000, Insurance $5,000—Origin of Fire Not Known

Fire of undetermined origin razed to its foundation the manufacturing plant of the Charlevoix Lumber Company and did some minor amount of damage to the office building and ware house located a few feet south of the main plant as well as some damage to a large storage shed located north of the manufacturing plant.

The fire was observed just three or four minutes before midnight Wednesday of last week by Charles Sherman who was passing the plant and by Harvey O'Brien who was at his place on the bridge tower at about the same time, when each of the men turned in an alarm. The former from the Sugar Bowl and the latter from the tower, at which time the fire had reached an advanced stage, such as was evident spelled doom for the manufacturing part of the plant.

Notwithstanding the lateness of the hour, at which time the streets were practically deserted, a large number of people were soon at the scene of the conflagration, but could do but little in the way of rendering assistance to the firemen who were using their best equipment and physical endeavor to check and subdue the flames. This, after strenuous work, was finally accomplished, succeeding saving the various structures, other than the main plant. This was reduced to a mass of wreckage and at the foundation lay the entire equipment, machines, shafting, pulleys, motors, etc., worthless, or only of such value as will, when the force of the fire is all over, allow them to be sold for scrap iron which means but very little.

Taken all in all the fire was serious from every standpoint, a heavy financial loss to the Lumber Co., while the community will be subjected to the amount of insurance covering the property and consequently will, when the force of the main plant out of regular steady employment until such time as the Company can readjust itself from its present difficulties.

Several theories as to the origin of the fire have been advanced,faulty electric wiring, spontaneous combustion, tramps, etc., but up to this time no definite decision has been reached as to the probable cause, but the regular night watch has been guarding the property authentic information along this line is difficult to obtain.

The general conclusion drawn by many is that the fire originated at some point on the lower floor of the structure and that it developed with great speed, spreading rapidly throughout the entire building and that it had reached a stage where there was no possible chance for the fire department to save the main plant at the time they went into action with their equipment and only through long and strenuous effort did they succeed in saving the adjoining, nearby buildings used by the company in conducting the business.

A late estimate of the loss on machinery and equipment places the amount at $7,000 or slightly more. This is covered by insurance in an amount approximately $5,000.

Mrs. Mable Goddard is heavily interested in, and with others, owned the building, Ross at Lincoln, New Hampshire, hence information as to probable loss and protection by way of insurance is not available.

The business of the Lumber Company will continue the same as in the past, but, of course under a heavy handicap until such time as they can replace the machinery and equipment, install the same and make a readjustment suitable to carry on as in past years.

C. H. S. BALL TOSSERS AT PETOSKEY TOMORROW NIGHT

Tomorrow evening Coach Kipka will take his mighty basketball team to Petoskey for a return game with the Northmen who were defeated here by a margin of only one basket when the Red and White met the Blue and White two short weeks ago. The Reserves will also go along and play in the preliminary with the Petoskey Reserves as opponents.

Both of these games are liable to be pretty close and we hesitate to make any rash prophecies, but we expect Charlevoix to make itself heard from A Petoskey victory tomorrow night.

OF THIRTY-ONE LICENSE PLATES

TIME EXTENDED UNTIL FEB 1 TO CAR OWNERS

The local branch of the state department was notified by wire on Tuesday of this week to the effect that no sales of 1931 license plates were to be made on December 31, 1930, or fees collected on that date. This is to enable the business that is transacted under the regime of John S. Haggerty, Secretary of State, to be separated definitely on the state records and on those of the local branch from that incoming under the administration of his successor, Frank-D. Fitzgerald.

The telegram also carried the information that the time limit in this county for 1931 plates had been extended until January 1, 1931. Your 1930 plates are therefore good until that date, at which time every car owner should have provided himself with 1931 license plates. Those who are financially able to do so are urged to procure their 1931 plates as early as possible so as to avoid a rush of business around the first of February that will make it difficult to get prompt and efficient service.

Another source of water treatment that in the fact that the home already has in the fact that the home already has in the home and the water supply is kept clear by using one of the many water softening devices that are now on the market. Some of these are equipped with automatic laundries with capacity for exposing and injecting into the home and so much as 25 gallons of water daily.

Weather stripping of windows and doors and the use of storm sash will materially reduce the infiltration of outdoor dirt. The small amount of dirt that comes from the heating plant flue can be cut materially by the use of a good furnace cement in the joints. Some owners will see to it that the heating system is kept clean, but this can usually be left undone if others are wet down.

Now think what a godsend it would be if there were some device that would emit a bell when we turn out a sloppy piece of work, or automatically give a "Vick when we get only almost a quarter of our energy to our job.

Edward Holland Latham, the Shooter Disappeared and Has Not Yet Been Located

Ed. Latham was home to Petoskey from the hospital for an hour or two Saturday morning following a shooting affray in which he was brought home for treatment for injured leg.

The shooting was the outcome of a quarrel in which it is reported jealousy was a predominant factor and which occurred at Boyne City in the home of Mrs. Frederick W. Magold and Mrs. F. M. Lamb of Charlevoix.

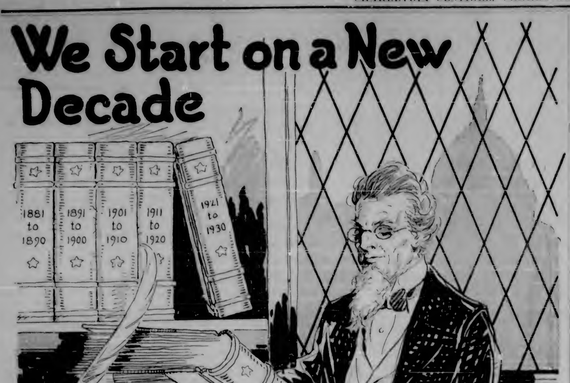
MOISTENED AIR KEEPS DOWN DUST

Only Small Part of Household Dirt Originates in House.

Where does all the dust come from? That is an everyday puzzle query with the average housewife as she goes about her home with various cleaner, dust mops and polishing cloths.

According to the Holland Institute of Thermology of Holland, Michigan, a very large part of the dust that keeps the housewife busy flitters into the house through the cracks around doors and windows and, as is to be expected a large portion is carried in on shoes and clothing. Quite a small percentage of the dust actually originates in the home according to the character of the neighborhood the dwellers, dust is made up of a wide variety of particles in industrial centers, it may include soot, grime, iron, silica, clay, and limestone. In this latter class of dust is found the street refuse, hay, cotton, and dust shreds of textiles and scores of the other unsavory b

We Start on a New Decade



By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
Drawing by Ray Walters

TO-DAY your nation is and we start on a new decade. When January 1, 1930, arrives there were those who insisted it up the beginning of a new decade, but they were wrong. For it upon the last year of the third Sunday and January 1, 1931, upon the first year of the fourth decade of the Twentieth century. But their hostile was in the minority. The vast majority of the people of the country, in the year 1920 had one method of celebrating the years' value the Birth of Christ" gives us a fixed quantity of time, the fact is that our calendar is not marked off in the scientific bill on that it is not as accurate as it pretends to be.

For instance, there is a reasonable doubt as to whether the coming year is in reality "1931 A. D." or not. If it were given its strictly proper name it might be called "1931 A. D." and also 1935 A. D. And that is because a mistake was made away back in 527 A. D. Then, on January 1 this year the Year of Our Lord 1931 will become another number was made some back on account of the mistake in the way the original mathematical confusion of our calendar is explained by James Kendall Hosmer, saying:

"There is really no reason for starting each new year on the day called January 1 except that Julius Caesar so decreed it more than nineteen centuries ago. But the Roman year of the year 'the Consul and Julius' in the year 46 B. C. was 355 days long. Instead of the day that we now call January 1 it began on March 23.

"Because Caesar assumed the year to be 11 months and 14 days long, it really is the first week through the centuries until the 1582 they were 14 days out of place. January 1 had already added to the calendar on the January marked out by Caesar.

"In attempting to correct this discrepancy Pope Gregory turned the calendar back, not to its position in Caesar's day, but to its position at the time of the church council of Nicaea in 325 A. D., when the calendar already had crowded forward four days.

"Had Pope Gregory made a complete correction, January 1 would now be the first day of March, now call December 28.

"But, after all, the fact that Jan. 1 is still four days away from its position fixed by the use of a Roman emperor is not great importance. The really important matter is that the date shall not drift from its moorings, so to speak, and base up new points of reference in the seasons, and its stability within a very tiny range was properly assumed by the corrections of Pope Gregory made.

"The year is a repetition of the same months and days, and can best be thought of as a circle. A trip around a circle can start at any point, and similarly the year could be thought of as starting on any day. In fact, throughout the past, different peoples have started the year in all the various seasons.

"There are, however, four logical points to start a new year, based on astronomical considerations. These are the winter solstice, which now falls on December 22, the summer solstice, June 21; the spring equinox, March 20; and the autumn equinox, September 23. Julius Caesar chose the astronomical solstices, when they arbitrarily started their calendar year at the point called January 1, followed by only seven days site of the most logical dividing lines, namely the spring and winter solstices.

"This is a logical starting point for the people of the northern hemisphere (and their interests have so far dominated world arrangements, because all things start to grow soon after the year's yearly retreat in the south, and apparently times have been scattered, things are planted and warmth.

"What has rather reformed the calendar was an efficient astronomical event took place on December 25. When growing Christianity, after experimenting with other dates between November 28 and the date on which to celebrate the birth of Jesus, in those the day that had been marked set under the Julian system by the winter solstice.

"Not only was the date, settled by the Julian error, had passed from the solstice, and by the time the Christians celebrating became part of the calendar had crawled forward until the day called December 25 occurred four days later than the solstice.

"As the centuries passed, Christmas crawled to additional days away from the solstice. When Pope Gregory applied his correction to the calendar he pushed December 25 ten days back of its farthest advance, but left it still four days away from the winter solstice.

"In the year 527 the solstice as to the time of Christ's birth was not very dependable, and it is now believed by many scholars that the calculation on which the Christian era was based were in error by from three to seven years.

"We call our new year 1931, therefore, not because we know it to be the nineteen hundred and thirty-first time since the birth of Christ, but because a monk named Dionysius Exiguus named it so in the sixth century. Dionysius, who was a Roman scholar, decided that Christ was born on the 25th day of December in the year 754 after the founding of the Roman empire. Dionysius, therefore, started the year 754 A. U. C. (from the founding of the city of Rome) as the year 1 A. D. (Anno Domini, the year of our Lord).

"Dionysius' calculations were based on the writings of Luke, who stated that Christ was born in the days of Herod the Great, who died in the year 750 A. U. C. Matthew, however, stated that Christ was born in the days of Herod and Quirinius, governor of Syria, who did not come into power until the year 759 A. U. C. Dionysius, therefore, was in error by at least nine years.

"Then, in 1582, the United States was back in error by seven years. It really is the date we have worked through the centuries until the 1582 they were 14 days out of place. January 1 had already added to the calendar since the time of Julius Caesar.

"In attempting to correct this discrepancy Pope Gregory turned the calendar back, not to its position in Caesar's day, but to its position at the time of the church council of Nicaea in 325 A. D., when the calendar already had crowded forward four days.

Sweet Clover Is Great as Manure

Tests Show Crop of Big Value in Rotation to Be Plowed Under.

Rather astonishing results as to the value of sweet clover as a nitrogen-furnishing manure are announced by the Ohio agricultural experiment station. Nine three years' test it is said found that not less than 150 pounds of nitrogen were contained in and acre of sweet clover on May 31 in any of the test years. An application of 300 pounds of any high analysis fertilizer, such as 2-12-6, would add less than one pounds of nitrogen to the soil.

Plow Under Clover.

These figures were developed in tests to determine the best time of the year to plow under sweet clover. It was discovered that the plants had the greatest nitrogen content about the middle of May. Also it being the peak accumulation in the experiments.

The white sweet clover was used in the experiment stations. Since the value of sweet clover as a manure has been demonstrated seed houses are handling larger and larger quantities of it and many orchards could for profitable results if sweet clover were used in the place of rye, timothy or other seed and other foreign substances.

Time to Plow Under.

The outstanding practical lesson of the experiments is that for economic and maximum gain, it is best to plow under the growth of sweet clover from April 15 to May 31, so that the soil growing season may be utilized by the crop of corn. Sweet clover left to stand over for the fall seeding of the grain and more organic matter it was found, but did not have nitrogen than when plowed under May 31.

The experiment demonstrated that an acre of sweet clover on May 31 contained sufficient nitrogen for the entire nitrogen requirements of two bushels of corn and the stalks to produce it and that the sweet clover was of corrective value as a rotation crop to be plowed under to this stage.

Each Year People Are Buying Chicks Earlier

Practically every hatchery man in the Middle West this year has been in business for several weeks reports that hatching eggs people are bringing them in earlier. An announcement issued by the Missouri Poultry Improvement association says that the season has opened with an unusually large number of hatching eggs being received and made in the first week of January. Reports from other states indicate that the early season is opening up in a similar manner.

In 1925 the acreage here for about the past to be planted in peas and oats in Missouri was placed when the United States many plans 50%4 acres. Of this acreage 1,000,000 acres were planted by reasons April 2, 1925, and 1,000,000 acres by May 1. Of the total acreage planted in 1925 it is stated probable that during the coming season 1,000,000 acres will be planted with the greatest proportion of crops done on any new farm.

Salt Poisoning Among Chickens Not Common

It is a well known fact that the chicken is fond of salt and will eat it in certain amounts of salt in the ration. The fact that there have been reported a great many instances in recent years of chickens being killed by salt poisoning is probably due to the unfavorable season of salt, seems to be a fact. It is generally conceded that it is a very common practice among those poultrymen that chickens are not as easily poisoned by common table salt.

Certain experiments have been carried out which indicate that under the right conditions chickens can tolerate a much larger amount of salt than is generally been supposed. It has been shown, for example, that chickens eight or nine weeks old could be restricted to a ration containing as much as 3 per cent of common salt without serious result.

Best Hatching Results From Fowls on Range

Eggs from birds in range pens in the Missouri hatch from 10 to 15 per cent better hatching results than eggs from birds kept in small pens.

Feeding is important. Only clean, wholesome feed should be used. The ration should consist of about equal parts of corn, oats and wheat and mash of the milk in animal protein. While a good flow of eggs during the hatching season is desirable, it is better to have a smaller number of fertile eggs than a large number of less hatchable eggs.

The range should contain not over 20 per cent of dry milk and meat scrap together. If one has plenty of sweet skim milk, or buttermilk, it is unnecessary to use more than 5 per cent of dry milk or meat scraps.

War on Tuberculosis

The Missouri State Department of Agriculture has developed a means by which the testing for tuberculosis of cattle of a cow, a bull, or chickens infected with tuberculosis may in the future be given on the veterinarian's determination. Those are pictured in the state's natural color. It has been found that the test before putting a new male in one cannot be done the eggs will all be fertilized by the new male until at least three weeks have elapsed.

Feed Some Milk

By all means feed milk in some form, and include in your ration also plenty of cod liver oil in the shape and 5 per cent of alfalfa leaf meal or alfalfa or clover leaves from your cutting. Carrots, mangels, small potatoes, cabbages, cabbage and sprouted oats are all good, but do not feed more than seven pounds a day to 100 fowls. Water with the chill off should be furnished in cold weather and oyster shells and grit provided for best results.

Fire Blight Bacteria

Fire blight bacteria live over the winter on both apple and pear trees and at one time it was thought they could not live over in limbs less than one inch in diameter. This theory has been disproved and the fire blight germs are able to overwinter in twigs as small as ¼ inch in diameter. During the latter part of the summer the fire blight germs cease active growth of new tissues and remain alive or less dormant until spring when they take forth again.

POULTRY

TURKEYS RAISED IN CONFINEMENT

Idea That Large Fields Are Needed Disproved.

The poultry department of the Pennsylvania State college recently published some interesting work on feed consumption and cost of raising turkeys in complete confinement. Apparently the idea that turkeys require large fields for range has been disproved. B. M. Funk, who conducted this work at the Pennsylvania State college but who is now with the poultry department of the Missouri College of Agriculture, summarizes the experiments with turkeys as follows:

1. The average weight of the Bronze toms at 24 weeks was 18 pounds and the White Holland toms averaged 15.4 pounds at the same age.

2. The rate of growth obtained was greater than that heretofore reported.

3. The mash and grain consumption per bird for the first 24 weeks was 58.68 pounds and 56.12 pounds for the Bronze and White Holland turkeys, respectively.

4. The total cost of producing a pound of gain was 14.7 cents for the Bronze and 15.3 cents for the White Holland.

5. As the birds approached maturity the feed consumption increased, and it required 6.7 pounds of grain to produce a pound of gain between 20 and 24 weeks of age.

6. The protein intake remained at a high level until the eighteenth week, varying around 20 per cent. From the eighteenth to the twenty-fourth week the level decreased from 20.2 per cent to 18.8 per cent.

7. More than 93 per cent of all turkeys started were raised to market age.

8. The toms from blood and leather dressing for the males was 85 per cent, for the females, 89.1 per cent. The fat drawn birds showed a total shrinkage of 20.2 and 21.7 per cent for the males and females, respectively. These shrinkages are due to the fact that the birds were dressed on the night of Monday's market, some little time after leaving a shed fried tree his cottage, he went out, and from behind his garden hedge, went two men, close by. he said was a big for gentlemen from High Cay lodge, the other was Harrison. And he's Cousin he saw on go away to gather, a big sort of entertainment in the direction of Courthouse's. Now as we know, Parslave's never been seen afterwards, and the body of Mr. Mayhew.

Raising Turkeys While Confined is Practical

The Minnesota plan of raising turkeys in confinement consists in hatching and rearing artificially and raising them on range. Any one who is to build a roosting shelter in the shape of a shed, opening toward the south, one side of which is open. Roosting poles are placed in the shed, one resting into each fenced pen. The entire fenced area contains about an acre of land and as many poultry have ranged for several years. Each one-quarter acre is to be given an large enough for 200 or 300 young turkeys when fully formed out of a different trap door into a different pen for each one each month. The plan calls for careful feeding and keeping the turkeys away from chickens at all times.

Some Heat Needed

The Missouri experiment station is advising the use of brooder stoves in those laying houses which are subject to extreme changes in temperature. Poultry raisers realize the disastrous consequences of a 10 to 30 degree drop in temperature, and can modify this change without using all the artificial heat necessary to carry off moisture. Sheet iron is also suggested for the point where moisture accumulates, where the resistance of the white flank to cold.

Get Fertile Eggs

Mated to a male bird a hen within five days after a male bird is placed with the hens, according to tests made by the poultry division of the Missouri College of Agriculture. Ten to four weeks before one wishes to save eggs, so that the birds may become accustomed to their new quarters and to each other, the male should be placed with the hens before putting a new male in one cannot be sure the eggs will all be fertilized by the new male until at least three weeks have elapsed.

Feed Some Milk

By all means feed milk in some form, and include in your ration also plenty of cod liver oil in the shape and 5 per cent of alfalfa leaf meal or alfalfa or clover leaves from your cutting. Carrots, mangels, small potatoes, cabbages, cabbage and sprouted oats are all good, but do not feed more than seven pounds a day to 100 fowls. Have you ever indulged in a throne of rich velvet, sparkling effects of rhinestone buttons together with lovely lace? It's well worth making the venture, that is if you move in the social set and must dress to the occasion of smart daytime affairs.

An interesting note in regard to this stunning costume in the picture is that the evening bolero is separate. Remove the jaunty jacket and a most ravishing low-necked and sleeved evening frock stands revealed to the admirer in a semi-formal way.

Velvet is the material of the season as is plainly in the vogue of the jaunty jacketed frocks. So of the many new dress suits in black velvet that are being developed for the spring season.

The new dress suits in black velvet are going into the smartest affairs with the same assurance that they are going into the theatre.

DON'T WALK INTO TROUBLE

There seems to be very little hope in the remaining year with the 1,000,000 States as members of the present World Court, enough enough people to get enough new souls to make the necessary majority. Congress seems to have no stomach for the task, which is a great pity for the United States will be the loser by not having a hand in the framing of the laws which are to govern the nations of the world.

TO JOIN OR NOT TO JOIN

President Hoover's decision to submit the World Court question to the Senate will finish but only a formality started a year or more ago by Senator Borah, who introduced a resolution requesting certain information relative to the Court. Senator Borah's plan was left optional as to the Committee who framed the resolution, and it was left to the discretion of the Committee to frame such questions as they deemed necessary to get the information they desired. The Committee framed a plain enough, but not so clear that simply we who are not in the know, might not understand it. It will have to be determined whether there is a difference between the Borah resolution and Congress' action to enter matter where the United States will not accede to our request to step an arbitrary action in which we claim an interest the United States may withdraw from the court without prejudice.

The Senate will have to decide whether they right or withdrawal is surprised to the right of America to enter the Court on the terms it deems best for its interests. And every town, no doubt, farmers drop out because their lands are no longer worth working, the list of intelligent farmers becomes less.

PARENTS OR POLITICIANS

Every revolutionary philosophy of necessity strikes at the institution of the family—the home. It is the nursery of character, and as George Washington said to Patrick Henry, the strength of the nation when tested—in time of government. The home is the abiding place of natural human affection, which thinks feeling of patriotism known as socialism and communism, would destroy. The whole philosophy of revolutionary radicalism holds the inspiration in hatred—the home is a reptile basket of sin.

And so it is natural that moral revolutionaries generally, from the politico to the most extreme type, should strike at the home. It is natural that they should seek to destroy the institution of marriage. It is natural that they should seek to make children the wards of the state, rather than of mothers and fathers. To serve humanity in that abomination from which it has progressed since the earlier days of darkness, it is obvious that children should be taught the reverse of the ideals of character under our present form of civilization.

It was natural that following the socialistic administration of John Lindsay against Bishop Manning in the New York cathedral, those who stand for the bishop's support were revolutionary radicalism of whatever kind of religious, if existing standards of morality, of individual liberty or free government. It was natural that Judge Lindsay's valiantes gateway was also the attorney of the New York communists, in whose behalf he recently admitted in court that their purpose was to destroy the American government by violence and contended on that "night."

It is natural that revolutionary forces should seek great Congress—they are now doing legislation which would supply the entering wedge. That the abolition of federal aid for family control of childhood the ultimate goal of radicalism is the nature of the child from the parent to the control and guidance of the state, is the whole movement forbid the existence of corporations and labor unions, for of corporations and labor unions are the bulwarks of liberty. Under government is not Soviet Russia, where children are taught to despise their parents; these the aliens of religion have been torn down and the temples of ruthless tyranny erected in their stead. There the legal trial was up of a home requires no greater formality than the issuance of a license for the legal license in the United States.

There is much that federal and state governments can do in the interests of children. Covering the nation with a network of blind agents of politics to assume guidance of child-life in contravention of the traditional rights and duties of parents, is a disservice. It would be better to educate parents in child life than to their children—children that are being abandoned with the growth of the idea that personal responsibility is at an end and that the obligations of parenthood do not extend beyond the Great White Father at Washington.

Half Dozen Ways to Reduce Your Winter Fuel Bill

Home Heating Troubles Largely Traceable to Poor Draft and Dirty Heating System.

By following a few simple rules, home owners can effect material savings in their winter fuel bills, according to the Holland Institute of Thermology of Holland, Mich. These rules or targets concern the maintenance and operation of their heating system. There is little or no expense attached to their observance, the term required being but a little more than passing interest in the heating system by the home owner.

1—Ash pit should be cleaned regularly as ash accumulations interfere with draft, and lack of proper draft in turns at fuel waste because of incomplete combustion.

2—All chimneys must be true and tight. If fire doors are loose when check draft is absent and draft doors, which should be open, draft is sufficient. Chimney should be examined for possible defects such as cracks or being clogged.

3—Prevent firing results in waste. Temperature should not be allowed to drop more than ten degrees over night. Anthracite coal waves it possible to bridge good full fire—not a "roaring hot" fire.

4—Maintain sufficient supply of moisture in indoor air, say, a relative humidity of 60 or 65 degrees. This assures complete powered comfort at moderate temperatures of 70 or 72 degrees.

5—Keep grates in A-1 condition. Broken or warped grates allow an inferior coal to drop into ash pit. Ashes must settle when fire rotates grates to be turned out.

6—Insure uniform of heating plant should be free from soot and ashes. These accumulations act as insulator. Likewise chimney should be free from soot and ashes, which also retard draft.

The heating plant is subjected to severe strain at the top of the flue and low temperatures during the firing cycle. By keeping the entire system including the chimney, clean and free from physical defects, it will render maximum service and efficient heating service, and last longer.

TRACE ODOR OF "BURNED AIR" TO HOUSEHOLD DUST

The smelling of burnt or scorched air is merely a symptom of the thing, further according to the Holland Institute of Thermology of Holland, Mich., notwithstanding that many persons who have lived in overheated and hot surfaced unusually tenacious involved or more because of the odor of burning it sets cures.

Clean air passing over a red-hot surface is otherwise, says the institute, not harmful to the human system. Experiments conducted by the institute have proved that the human nose is very sensitive to the odors of burning dust, and that the slightest trace of burning dust in the air is detected by the nose. Air that is not contaminated with dust will not burn the nose, even though it is passed over a red-hot surface.

During the Winter Season the Air in Most Homes Is Drier Than the Air Of Deserts. Lack of Moisture and Excessive Heat Are the Cause of Much Discomfort and Illness

That heating systems—to which such "burned air" is attributed—would be of very definite benefit to the occupants is apparent from the fact that in a heating a grand image of a state and commanding all to fall down and worship it. Nazism is nothing more than a revolt against civilization and humanity, in that it represented a throwback to barbarism through the alarmingly yearning for a leader.

And so it is being demanded of America that a beginning be made to accommodate the autocratic ego of the parent in the control and guidance of youth. Behind the Fascist movement lurks the sinister spirit of communism and bolshevism, for of communism and bolshevism are the children whose working would be overthrow of government is not Soviet Russia, before. For years Russia has been a disturbing factor and has only recently completed dumping commodities on an already glutted world market. Conditions have been such in Egypt and India, too, that when one considers the hundreds of millions of people in China, in India, in Egypt and Russia, the fact that industrial unrest when they represent, is easy to realize what the disturbing influence of the matter—if the nations but unite to free the rest of the world from nearly half the people in politics and turmoil to the point where it would tend to disrupt there is every reason for world wide depression.

Already there are signs of improvement in China, while hopes have arisen that an agreement establishing stability may be reached in India. Here are factors which ought to make for constructive improvement of world conditions in the near future, unless the world is to be nearly disappointed again. The return of stable conditions in China and political peace in India would give the big way toward a substantial gain in the other countries of the world.

WHEN CRIME WAS HAZARDOUS

The Deseret News of Salt Lake City takes a strong stand against anti-revolver laws—a favorite nostrum of our crime reformers. When a revolver was part of the equipment of the puny express rider and the cowboy, says the News, "When the shotgun was carried on the driver's seat of the stage coach, and when the merchant at the cross-roads sevel goods over a counter that opened sudden death under a trigger, police protection was despised, but not absolutely necessary. Robbery was hazardous in the extreme. Men were not held up and shagged for a little small change.

In the early days of summer resorting, to what have now become the fashionable regions of Northern Michigan, all of the travel by water was done in a dugout little propeller called the A. C. Van Raalte. It was named after good old Dominie Van Raalte who founded the Holland colony, at Holland and became widely known over Western Michigan. The Van Raalte was a steamer, but in a heavy sea the old craft pitched and rolled so vigorously that the passengers had to hold on to keep from being pitched overboard. Then there were trunks to be carried from one room to another. The only new man, County Clerk Meech, acted as purser, and he was a busy fellow day and sworn in as clerk today.

STATE BULLETIN: DEPARTMENT OF CONSERVATION

Lansing—What does the state geologist and his staff do during the winter months? Well, the work of the geological division of the Conservation Department answered that question today.

His copper and iron experts completed an examination and appraisal of all deposits of this kind for state taxation purposes. They made geological surveys of the west end of the Marquette Iron Range, and studied the outcrops of the copper-bearing rock strata in Houghton County, they compiled maps and reports of all work.

Their gas mask called for the preparation and assay of samples and logs of more than 200 oil wells. The mineral map, started in 1930, was completed and gas areas, centering in Michigan and Western counties.

It also made maps showing the location of wells in three of the "pools" completed a survey of the gas resources of the Muskegon field, and compiled and issued weekly, monthly and monthly statements of oil production.

Generally speaking—the geology of the state is well known, but the department is now engaged in making detailed maps of these counties. It also completed topographic maps of small and areas of the mineral resources of Michigan.

In general a search studying the occurrence of sand dunes with particular reference to their origin and—a matter of importance to resorts in certain parts of Michigan's popular lakeshore.

And in addition to these activities the division examined and analyzed soils with a view to their use in road building and in the development of new water supplies.

Gen. John J. Pershing

The competitive examination for West Point was on. It was a close contest between two of the candidates. The Missouri congressman, conducting the examination for his district, had a hard time grading them. Finally, he decided that one of the two leaders rated just one point better than the other. He named John Joseph Pershing as the winner and appointed him as a cadet to the United States Military academy.

It was by this narrow margin that Uncle Sam obtained the general who was to command the greatest armed host ever raised in the United States and to lead it to victory with the allies in the greatest war in the world's history.

No ambition nurtured from early boyhood prompted John Pershing to seek admission to West Point. He had no set ideas on becoming a soldier when he was a little fellow. In fact, he was undecided for a career as a teacher or a lawyer, and was a student in the Kirksville, Missouri, school, when he won the appointment to the Military academy.

He saw his congressman's notice of the examination in a newspaper and asked his sister, who was also attending the Kirksville school, if she would advise him to try the test. She regularly would also told him. This resulted with his own boss on the subject, as his military career may be said to have had its first impetus in the reading of a newspaper advertisement.

General Pershing was born in 1860 at Laclede, Mo., a hamlet of some 700 inhabitants. His father, whose ancestors had come from Alsace, the disputed state at Lorraine and also owned a farm on the outskirts of the town. The future commander of the A. E. F. was the eldest of six children. He assumed much responsibility in helping to care for them.

The training hardships soon overcame those on the farm. Young John developed into a sturdy youth and in his teens was a fine athlete. The summers he and a cousin took from a live surveying and engineer south. He was a leader in the sports and games of his companions, and a good fighter when he had to be. He was not the bookish type of boy, however, and showed little interest in his studies. He finished high school with the youngsters of the town.

Before he entered the Kirksville, Missouri, normal school for two terms he taught school at Prairie Mound, a few miles from his home. He was then eight years older than the average freshman in the normal school, and was looked up to by them. Some of his pupils were older than that. One day he had to discipline a grown boy named Tim Lucas, who was six feet tall and tipped the scales around the two hundred pound mark. He succeeded with the youngsters of the town.

He had a gun in his pocket. He slammed about and roared threats. After the pupil was subdued the gun went the way. Then he handed him a switch, standing with his back.

Young Pershing was a leader among the students at Kirksville. He was equally prominent at West Point. They tell the story that when a group of hazers tried to put the new cadet through the mill he thrashed two of them soundly.

He was zealous, persistent and determined in his efforts to become an efficient soldier during his student days at the Military academy. He made a good record in his studies, ranking thirtieth in his class when he was graduated in 1886. He was senior cadet captain and was elected president of his class.

The family made a social document who assigned to the cavalry. He saw service as a young officer under Nelson A. Miles in the Apache, Geronimo and Wounded Knee campaigns. Then he taught military tactics at the University of Nebraska, also acting as assistant professor of mathematics.

He studied law while assigned to Nebraska, was graduated with honors and admitted to the bar. Then he was ordered to West Point as an instructor. From there he was detailed to duty in Cuba, serving under General Bates in the Spanish-American war. He was promoted for bravery at the battle of El Caney.

He made a brilliant record in the Philippines and led the expedition into Mindanao before that. He was colonel of the A. E. F. Uncle Sam was fortunate, indeed, that John Pershing topped his rival in the West Point competitive examinations for his district by the narrow margin of that single point.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK By WALTER THUMBULL

This may be old, but it was told to me as an unpublished story. Yes—is a man in New York who liked to have people around him, so he used to keep open house on Sunday afternoons. It got so that a good many persons came regularly to eat, drink, smoke and talk. The man, while not rich, was pretty well off and at various times, helped some of his visitors financially over rough spots in the road. He felt that they were his friends. Many of them didn't meet any help. Sunday afternoons were gay affairs.

Then came the crash and the host was wiped out. The next Sunday he made a little speech. He said he was embarrassed but the truth was that he had been caught out on a limb by the falling stock market and was flat broke. He hoped to get back on his feet, but he was broke now.

"But I still have this apartment," he said, "and I hate to see those pleasant Sunday afternoons discontinued. We still could meet here, but—as it isn't easy to say—I haven't money enough just now even to provide things to eat, drink and smoke. I thought, if you each would put in two or three dollars, we could buy some stuff and still continue these pleasant times."

The guests accepted the proposal, but the next Sunday none of them arrived. They haven't been back since.

A writer got what he thought was a fine chance to show a new play with an amusing domestic slant to a town here New York. He induced several well-known producers to attend the try out. One big scene showed a "surprise" husband, who had been late home, making his way to his bedroom. The producer was supposed to enter in sports clothes but the actor who played the part had heard that there would be notables in the audience and at the last moment decided that she would be more effective in a negligee. When the time for his entrance arrived, she was making the change.

The pair on the stage sprang apart as the proper cue; but no mother appeared. They made how some more, stiff on mother. The situation grew strained. Finally, the girl burst cried:

"I thought I heard mother," she said. "I'd better go see where she is," and she walked off stage.

The man left alone, tossed books, lit cigarettes and stalked for some moments, but there was no sign of mother or daughter, so he said:

"I must see what his beeome of them," and he walked off, leaving the stage empty.

He felt that the visiting producers were in instantics and the curtain fell on another play gone wrong.

There is a handsome doorman in front of a fifth avenue apartment who looks like a Germans drill sergeant. He spends all day standing up in front, smiling visits and opening automobile doors. The other night an inhabitant of the apartment house slammed what the doorman did with his overcoat. He was also standing stiffly in front of an armory, probably waiting for some one to come out and put a uniform on him, so he would feel free to call a taxi.

WHAT WE MOST DESIRE

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois

Until all things considered was a penny earned and a penny spent. It is not so much how we get but how we spend that makes for happiness and success. Until we learn to spend wisely and well all the wealth and all the leisure that will come to us will be of little value.

Many, whom I have known for some years has a good salary, I think, and lucky, besides both. He has, in addition, a college degree which should have given him some balance and some training. He has drifted from one thing to another, however, for the last ten years, and always with distinction. When he joined church I thought he would be a power for good among our young people, but to his amazing soon, besides of the church since. He is too busy. He was going to be a banker when he entered college—economics or accountancy or something like that. Then it was business, law, the consular service, a half dozen other things, and up to date it has really been nothing but manner, for he no sooner is possessed of one desire than he is seized with another. He has the desires, but he does not seek after them very long and so realizes nothing.

I have watched my young nephews and nieces getting ready for high school with a great deal of interest. They are strong, healthy, active young animals full of evidence of life and vigor. Until age and duty and responsibility have overtaken them they will not engage in any task with the steady zest with which they will fill up their time. But while they waste that time here, how much they might have learned, how much they might have done! But while they waste that time they are learning how to waste time, and that is a lesson which many of us never unlearn. We are always trying to kill time instead of using it. We are always trying to get through with something in order to get to something else. We are always looking forward to the time when we shall be free to do what we please instead of what we must. We are always looking forward to the time when we shall be free to do what we please instead of what we must. We are always looking forward to the time when we shall be free to do what we please instead of what we must.

To Restore Queen's Toy Village

Paris—Plans made at the suit to Austria by Marie Antoinette to prevent that she was forced, account of extravagance in building the hamlet of doll houses at Versailles, have been abandoned and will be kept in remaining the hamlet to its original condition.

A favorite resort of tourists and students of history has been this fairy village, miniature of opulent life in which the queen, lured by the fascinating of amusing, spent so much time. They have seldom in their sleeping room to avoid conversation at regular intervals on one hour daily-sized dressmaker is coming on. They go to bed early. In order that they may get a proper amount of sleep. They drink no coffee; they use no tobacco; they eschew whiskey to such as be detrimental to the growing athlete. They tend books on how to play the various games in which they are interested and like David they can say "One thing have I desired; that will I seek after."

Disasters for '31 Are Predicted

Paris—Mme. Delmos-Freyn, famous astrologer and confidante of several great political figures, predicts that 1931 will see the end of Fascism in Italy and a revived revolution in Germany, accompanied by economic and material retrogression in every part of the globe.

"I see," she says, "the violent death of Italy's greatest statesman followed by a complete transformation of the political regime. Germany will be tormented by revolutions causing economic and financial ruin.

"Argentina and Brazil have not yet completed their political revolutions and there will be several violent changes, without great bloodshed during 1931. Spain, also will tossed upon the stormy sea of political convulsions."

Madame Freyn prophesies that war is not approaching in Europe but that 1931 will be passed under the constant peace of war without actual fighting. During this time France will be compelled to consolidate its position through the efforts of a "young man" whose name it is from these that the statesman is to be reconstructed.

Also of the diplomatic game in the Balkans is that the Soviet wars may wage a fiercer conflict. It will have to look like a new Europe for the—one scattered and scattered to some.

Back in the reign of Louis XVI, it looked as though he of to not hope there were two times of his great grandfather.

The eighteenth hamlet will to exist is an Alpine Adventure now a year, with a toy wooden mill when in the last servants and all evidence of the inhabitants of later years removed.

Work is still in progress for bringing the toy village back to its original glory. The Queen's Hamlet was begun by Marie Antoinette. At Grand Canyon are countless hamlets formed for grown ones on the bank and drew appointments 100 feet each time.

In the Hours of the Time of Fortune to Montreal, Hyde has a series from "Silmes" of certain drawings of the hamlet made by Mother. Her work met who built it. They were entered practices. The queen had the little hook made to select back to her home in Austria to prove for her fate by that the hamlet was a type of a people little affect and that the whole disenchantment fells which rooms had made it.

The book owns put to Vienna Marie Antoinette had to answer to the French, revolution on the charge of reckless extravagance and the chief of the guillotine ended the argument about it.

Why Officials Did Not Sign Large Contracts

Minit has been known about coal ships economy, but perhaps the largest single saving to the government accidental shortage by nearly four years. It was made by Jimmy Walker Warwick, then comptroller of the treasury.

One afternoon in November, 1918, Jimmy Warwick was seated in Secretary Roberts of duty in on the War department. Warwick found contracts and a deck of other high officers seated around a huge table heaped with papers.

"Those papers are contracts," one of them explained. They represent the result of months of negotiations with private manufacturers. None of them knew when armed but we have told the manufacturers to each case that we expect to sign them. They cover munitions and other supplies sent to each case the manufacturer has gone ahead on the assumption that the contract would be signed.

"Since those negotiations were started, however, the armistice has been signed. Now what we would like to know, Jimmy Warwick, is whether that makes any difference to whether we sign, signify and seal them."

Jimmy Warwick looked at the big pile.

"How much money is involved in those contracts?" he asked.

"Oh, I suppose roughly, a billion dollars," counted one official.

"Well, gentlemen," replied Jimmy Warwick, "if you only say that—if you may have never been out of jail—I will go to the penitentiary."

He walked out and his instructions were not signed. The billion dollars in loans or less remained in the hands of the manufacturers—Collier's Weekly.

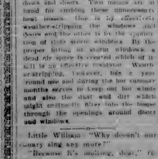
War on Furnace Soot Repays Home Owner

As little as a teaspoonful of soot on the inner heating surface of one square foot will rob the heating system of 28 per cent, according to the soot campaign of Thermology Heating Institute.

These same inches discover every pipe and heating surface should be examined by engineers at the University of Michigan, and the results of this examination, are proved this same soot as early means of prevention to the home dwellers.

Thermology Institute, which has examined hundreds of furnaces, has announced the heating plant of every home should be cleaned at least once each year, and that the best time for this cleaning is the beginning of winter, before the heating season begins.

Home owners who will not install oil burners during their present coal burning heating systems with the expectation that the new method of burning will overcome any serious deficiencies that characterized past heating performance, warns Dr. Holland Institute of Thermology of Holland, Mich. Furthermore, the heating system should be in first-class condition efficiency.



Gas Heating Plants Should Be Thoroughly Examined by Competent Man Prior to Installation of Oil Burning Equipment.

The oil burner installation will cost remain more than the gas service expected from it.

Inasmuch as the majority of heating plant troubles are due to defective draft, a draft test should be made of the heating plant including the chimney. Such a test will reveal the location of leaks in the joints until and in the chimney. Some of these should be repaired, for a good draft is absolutely indispensable for satisfactory oil burner performance.

In addition to the draft test, the heating plant should be given a thorough physical examination. If the oil burner installation is below standard, it is unwise to make consideration a new heating plant system unless it is the only means of securing proper heating results. The installation of the proper oil burner should be considered the least part of the installation cost, since other elements of the heating system are usually responsible for poor heating results. Home owners should be extremely careful in selecting a firm to do the work, and should insist on a guarantee of satisfactory performance.

First Iron Stove Made in America

Modern Air-Conditioning System Goes Back to Franklin's Invention.

Prior to the invention of the cast iron stove by Benjamin Franklin, more than two centuries ago, the fireplace was practically the only means of heating the interiors of homes, says the Holland Institute of Thermology of Holland, Mich.

In the years since passed the change in heating science has reached a high stage of perfection, and no trouble is experienced in keeping homes warm provided the heating plant is of proper size and intelligence is used to bring it, and if the heating system is properly installed of soot and dirt accumulations.

Most popular with the business of people, in the opinion of the Institute, is the system though many homes are heated with steam, vapor or hot water systems. In the warm air heating field, however, that the most important improvements have been made in home heating. In fact, leading manufacturers of warm air heating plants for their products air-conditioning systems, for they perform other functions than merely heating heat during the winter season.

Some of these functions is that of adequately moistening the room air, so that complete physical comfort may be enjoyed, without the excessively low temperatures that characterize the average home. When the air contains a proper percentage of moisture, the temperature is reported at somewhat less temperature or 70 or 72 degrees. And this percentage of moisture not only, the humidity is assured by humidifiers that automatically evaporate from 3 to 25 gallons of water daily according to requirements.

Another function of the air conditioning system is to purify the air, and this is accomplished by passing the air through filters that automatically remove dust and dirt which might otherwise filter into the house through the openings around doors and windows.

When to the next box car of hay, asked the mother.

"Because it's shedding time," replied the mother.

"Then," he exclaimed in heartfelt tones, "I wish Aunt Mamie would molt."

Ten Thousand Lives Lost Annually on Account of Fire

At the close of each year ten thousand people in the United States will have burned to death and 25,000 will have suffered serious injuries, or according to the Holland Institute of Thermology of Holland, Mich. Fire statistics reveal that the greatest loss of life and property occurs from three and the cause of destruction is injuries is approximately the same each year.

Of this basis 50 persons will be burned to death and 150 will be seriously injured by fire within the next 24 hours. Of the total number of casualties seven in house fires, six in two fatal outbreaks that cause one to be burned to death and two injured, involving damage to property each year take place in homes and several hundred in stationary stores in some fireworks fire statistics.

Records disclose that on the average throughout the year there are eight fires in 9 schools, 3 churches, 15 hotels, 1 hospital, 1 correctional, 8 department stores, 6 theaters, 1 type of garages, 2 bathing plants, and property in the future.

Defective fires, chimneys and heating stoves and stovepipes are the most frequent causes of house conflagrations, causes of largest fire losses during 1929, during the same year the additional property loss directly traceable to these three sources was estimated at $50,000,000. It is of vital interest, says the Institute, that the public and insurance authorities are fully advised that fires arising from these sources may be classified as entirely preventable. These losses are the results of neglect and defective heating systems of the property for loss!

Home fires from all causes, continued, in the opinion of the Institute, if home owners would accept their heating systems more thoroughly and monitor. A careful inspection and cleaning at least once each year would shorten defects and permit of their repair before another heating season commences. Settlement of chimneys or hot flues may cause cracks to appear in the walls or roof. Such cracks should be filled with cement mortar to prevent fire hazard. Defective flues, chimneys and stovepipes should be repaired at once.

TORTURE THUGS FOOLED BY SAFE; KILL WATCHMAN

Inflict 20 Wounds on Body of Man in Attempt to Get Combination.

New York—In a vain endeavor to force from a fifty-year-old watchman the combination to a safe which he supposes—the combination of the safe—and a fifty-year-old student and student Carl Friedman to death after enduring hours of torture by thugs who ran into his head and body. Twenty-four wounds were inflicted upon him.

The robbers left the safe intact as well, after their effort proved futile. It contained apparently frightened only the boys were making preparations to do it.

The body of the murdered watchman was found an hour later when living uncle, a laundry worker, rose early and could not gain access to the place. He kicked at the outside door in half the watchmen, and then called Patrolman Quinn of the East Twenty-second street station.

The Long Trail of Blood.

The two found their way through the darken door, received the initial shock at their finds upon the body, where at last been dumped from a laundry basket by the fiendish torturers.

Pools of blood formed a 200-foot trail into to the watchman's shaft, placed in front of the safe, and the police believe that the wounds the watchman, who was eight and no match for his assailants, as they tried to get from him the combination of the safe.

Then they turned their attention to the student, and left on the hand and face. When found, wounds did not obtain the desired information the robbers left him to die a horrible death in the police believe other stains in the station room in front of the key lay scattered in the portable floor on the chair in which the watchman sat, on the handles of safe door, and the lavatory room and in the rear alley extended to police every step in the murder and disposal of the body.

Find Bloodstained Tools

In a vacant lot back of the laundry detectives found a bloodstained paper bag, containing a knife and bit, glass cutter, screw driver, stiletto blade, and a pair of fine shoes. The tools, all of which are stained in blood, are the skilled. Aside from possible finger prints on the tools, the only other clew to the robbers was the print of a bare right foot on the blotting platform.

This discovery led detectives to believe that one of the robbers had remained his shoes to creep upon the watchman and overpower him. Police also believe the shoes and tools were thrown away by the fleeing thugs when frightened from the scene, perhaps by the groans of the dying victim.

See Big Changes in Home Heating

New System Destined to Affect House Values.

Now that the American public is becoming air-conditioning machines, it is easy to envision radical departures from present-day standards in home design and equipment, according to the Holland Institute of Thermology, of Holland, Mich.

Within a decade, today's modern home will be as definitely obsolescent as is the home built twenty years ago, the Institute predicts. The present revolutionary feature of the home of the future will center around the heating plant. Modern warm air heating plants for fuel-fired or gas burning systems are only forerunners of the more complete heating plants in store for the future. Not only will these plants be designed to heating their functions are to perform adequate supply of moisture into the home air, which is filtered, but they will also keep the air in gentle, yet stimulating motion throughout the home, so that the home owner is enjoying a constant flow of fresh air, and is always able to interpret find temperature is the same at all points. It is a divine attainment, the Institute comments, which leads to perfect health.

Heating systems such as mentioned are the unconscious of reality unless forecasts in heating and air conditioning systems with a complete system of heating, ventilating, cooling and humidifying, according to the Institute. Such systems are fully assured that free settling from these sources may be classified as entirely preventable. These losses are the results of neglect and defective heating systems of the property for loss!

$500,000 Cubic Feet of Air Pass Through Home Daily

During the winter heating season all in the average American home one gallon from moisture to supply the amount of moisture that it should contain to insure comfortable air at moderate temperatures and to protect health. In the average heated living room home which contains 1,000 or 12,000 cubic feet, are to eight gallons of water should be evaporated daily during the winter season to supply the required amount of moisture.

SHERIFF VAUGHN MAKES ARREST AT PETOSKEY

AFTER FOUR DAYS OF SEARCH

Waived Examination, Deposited $2,000 Cash Bond for Appearance at Next Term of Court

Following four days of concealment during which period local and State officials were searching for Ellsworth Bellant, wanted in connection with the shooting of Ed Lasanga, he was placed under arrest at Petoskey Wednesday, December 31st, by Sheriff Vaughn and gone thereafter arraigned in the Court of Robert Withers to answer a charge of felonious assault. The defendant waived examination and a few hours later deposited $2,000 cash bond, the amount placed by the Justice Withers to insure his appearance at the next term of the Charlevoix Circuit Court, after which Bellant was released to return to the home in Petoskey.

For the four days preceding his arrest Bellant succeeded in evading officials and this, too, regardless of the fact that they were hot on his trail from the time of the shooting until he was placed under arrest.

Rumors were freely circulated that Bellant had been taken a day or two earlier but these, like many other rumors, proved to be erroneous, the arrest being made Wednesday at Petoskey by Sheriff Vaughn, who had his man locked before making the trip to Petoskey to make the arrest.

Bellant has now made a statement as to his whereabouts during his four days of wandering, one is necessary for him to do so as officials have a splendid lineup of his antecedents during his absence.

Attorney B. H. Halstead of Petoskey appeared for Bellant in the Justice Court proceedings and will represent him in Circuit Court if or when the case comes on for trial.

JUDGE CAN'T SEE JOKE IN HERDING GEESE BY PLANE

The tenderfoot who was hen out to round up the lambs on a western sheep ranch, and at nightfall chased the corral on 50 panting jackrabbits, met his match recently in two native Oklahoma who set out in an airplane to ride herd on a flock of wild geese.

The succeeded, but not well. Circling about the river banks they formed together in formation and drove the birds southward along the river. Here "hunters" were waiting in blinds, and fired point-blank into the mass of birds.

The fish was taken out of the fish form of slaughter, however, that when the "herd riders" in the airplane learned that game wardens had witnessed the "hunting" from home, the game officials met the "hunters" on the river and fined each one $100 for involving damage to property each year take place in homes and several hundred in stationary stores in some fireworks fire statistics.

The Polar Bears, Charlevoix's game they kept nothing back, but independent basketball team, stepped hard every minute. Midland dropped their first game of the season last Wednesday evening to the came clear to Charlevoix with about fighting and mighty combination representing the Midland Hayden-Parker Cherry Company. The game Polar Bears, who have been the only was extremely close during the first team to defeat them, but Midland's stepped half, with neither team being more than two points ahead at any one time, but Midland got going during the last half and ran up a lead that was too much for the fighting locals to overcome. When the last quarter was half over we imagined ourselves a philosophically accepting Charlie's defeat, but we must give the men credit for not admitting it was decided until the final whistle. In fact, they did not know just what the score was, and although they knew that they were quite a way behind the fast-traveling downstairs, it was not until the game was finished that they knew the exact degree of their humiliation. They were too busy to watch the scoreboard.

Until this game we did not know just where Charlevoix stood, as the team had always been one they set out to defeat and not expected to win, and although we are well aware of the fact that they will "go quick Charlevoix did not know what happened" as one sports-

RED AND WHITE DRUBGAYLORD

LOCALS WIN EASILY 41-13 PLAY BOYNE CITY TOMORROW

(By HAROLD NEWMAN)

The Red and White high school basketball team triumphed over the Petoskey loosers for the second time this season to gain a 100-to record and substantial competition each over neighbors. The final score was 18-16. The margin of victory was just two points, the same as it was when the two teams met on the Charlevoix floor before the Holidays. Charlevoix started the game with a rush, and swept Petoskey off its feet in the first quarter, this gainine an early lead. In the first of the Northern's rising last quarter rally they were unable to overcome the lead of the Red and White team. Nowak got quite a bit of praise from Petoskey fans and Petoskey fans who watched the game, and he well deserved it. In addition to being the high scoring man of the evening, he played a nice game on defense, and was also a big help to his team in bringing the ball down the floor. He made five field goals or ten points. Avery also played a good game, making two field goals and two free throws for a total of points. McCall had no luck at all in his tries for field goals, being pressed pretty closely, but he connected with the basket twice from the free throw line Smith and McSaudy did their share, too, both playing superb games, especially on defense. Tenney only made five baskets from the playing floor, the rest of their points coming from the gift line.

The Reserve team was bewildered on the strange floor and lost by a big margin to the same team it defeated on the the local floor. The score was Petoskey Reserves 29, Charlevoix Reserves 8. Playing for Charlevoix were Campbell, Anderson, Fry, Baker, Eddy, Spurgeon, Potter, McCann, Geiser, Kirby. The first five started and the last five finished the game.

Charlevoix has a date with Boyne City tomorrow evening. This ought to be a real close game. It might be decided by only one point. Both times that Petoskey played Boyne City, Boyne City won the first time by one point, and the second time by three. Charlevoix won both times by two points. This game is important to both teams as it is a Conference engagement, and a defeat will be perhaps the only one further team will suffer in conference play this month. We are sure the locals will do their part anyway, but give them a lot of good support to ensure a Charlevoix victory. If the number of Charlevoix fans at the Boyne City game is as large as it was at the Petoskey scrap the team members ought to feel elevated, as they certainly received plenty of support last Friday.

The following taken from Petoskey Daily News:

Repeating their tactics of getting away to a fierce scoring attack which nearly swirling during the first eight minutes of play, the Charlevoix high school basketeers again won from Petoskey Northmen last night, the score being 18 to 16. The margin was one basket, the same as in the Charlevoix victory on her own floor some weeks ago. Again it was Nowak, flashy guard who led the attack. This player is considered the best running guard in Northern Michigan for the early season. Last night he had a deadly eye for the basket and sank four field goals before the Northmen got started. Once he took a pretty long shot from beyond the Petoskey defense. Pleasing to the home crowd was the work of Jack Johnson, Petoskey right forward, who came through to hook three field goals.

The Northmen showed their real ability only during the last quarter when they flashed an attack that carried them within three points of victory, after trailing far behind most of the way. Their speed and determination disclosed what the team is capable of once they get in the mode to do battle. The attack formations were well timed, passing banished nicely and the boys worked well together throughout the game. Their attack functioned much better than their defense in the opening half.

A POLITICAL SHIBBOLETH

It is interesting to note that to all the principal calls for public government into the affairs of business and industry, the answer is invariably the same—the cry of "socialism" is raised. Whether these recommendations do not exist, then to establish the right to exploit unchecked with the output. The shortage of credit in the United States is not part the outgrowth of the vast amount of money belonging to the American people, or private enterprises in many national across the seas. These investments the American government in aspects, to lend or invest in performing public service, or to buy foreign bonds in order that the American people with their small standing may not suffer the loss of their savings by reason of unscrupulous friends.

These type of national purposes are not organized. They main- tain that the government, and not, and is now handling, industrial development and general progress.

BOOSTING "WORLD INTEGRATION"

Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, protests against the "lawless" action of the State Department in declaring the Japanese have complied with its treaty in the matter of ports in particular purposes of defense.

In view of the fact that not for since learned the American banks have actually advanced money to the some conditions of the United States, Americans generally are inclined to believe that there is not much justification of such loans as to exist.

The notion is prevalent that Japan is placed there by Americans. It is gathered up from all the countries in the world by the force of that money, therefore, the American people, and their government, have an interest in the maintenance of peace in the Orient.

Whether this theory is a correct one or not, which would create a federal commitment to regulate currency affairs of the Orient, is left entirely to the people of the United States to weigh, through democratic processes which exist in the states where it is in vogue. Yet the people are asked to vote for expenditures that are not for federal government may invade States' rights and probably commit the United States to participation in American disputes.

Peace and harmony is gathered abroad, magnified and of all persons flow to its true importance. The ostensible fact is that the people of the average family budget. Food, clothing rent, and taxes all have and of the necessities of life. Yet that power is now one of the two or three leading national issues of the political pressure of advantage to the end of the day, the

FORTY PER CENT WASTED!

William Bruckart Minister of Harvard states that 40 per cent of every tax dollar spent in the United States is wasted. Such a statement is very governmental activities, the shifting of responsibilities, duplication of activities and the multiplication of number of employes. He points out lions of idle conditions, by investing the money of our people in low standard countries where these re- strictions do not exist, then be- vestment with the right to exploit

Mussolini declares that Italian "hard times" are due to the Wall Street market crash following an era of inflation and speculation which, he says, was responsible for the supposed prosperity of the United States. The fact that the United States produces one third of all the world produces, had nothing to do with it. Our modern machinery equipment and industrial methods did not contribute to Uncle Sam's prosperity. Our high standards of wages and living had nothing to do with it. Our prosperity was due, he declares, to the fact, that we made our money by speculation—in other words it all off one another. It was through Wall Street plunging in stocks that Americans acquired twenty-five million motor cars. The workers in our factories spent their idle hours watching the ticker. They took their profits and bought bath-tubs, radios and automobiles.

Mussolini also punctures the idea that mass production is a blessing rather than a curse because it gives the machine's power of increased consumption is unlimited, while the individual's power of increased consumption is limited. The Duce would hardly claim that the capacity of mankind to consume has yet been reached. It has been demonstrated that the consuming power of the 120,000,000 Americans is equal to that of 500,000,000 Europeans or a billion Asiatics. It would seem that Europe has some distance to go before it needs to dread the menace of consuming power.

Apart from such an abysmal logic of consuming power as we are now experiencing, there would seem to be no danger in increased production. Mass production, it may be observed does not apply to more than a fraction of goods and services. The adjustment of supply to demand constitutes a difficult problem, but it doubtless can be effected. The remedy is simple. Instead of a highly mechanized industries, Americans like Europeans, will seek activities of utility or beauty. When it is realized that Americans have four times as much money to spend as Europeans per capita, it will be understood that as yet the world stands in fact more danger from under-consumption than from over-production. The claim is therefore, unwarranted for most of the ideals in connected demand in this country were removed from their homes by periods of serious problem of over-production would be confronted here, apart from whatever danger might arise from the slackened consumption in the rest of the world would tend to make our market the dumping ground for cheap-labor producers the world over.

It is all right for Mussolini to blame his country troubles on the United States, if it will provide him with an alibi. In doing so he is only following in the steps of Washington's self-seekers in Europe and their echoes in this country. But thought- ful Americans realize that most of their troubles are due to the hangover from the European war and the attempt to integrate the economy with the European economic system since the war.

TRACE ODOR OF "BURNED AIR" TO HOUSEHOLD DUST

The question of burnt or scorched air is purely a figment of the imagination, according to Dr. H. Rand Immagine of Cleveland, Ohio, who declares that many persons who are passing over a perfectly satisfactory atmosphere in search of fresh air. Investigations conducted by Dr. Immagine have convinced him that the air is neutral to the extraordinary temperatures of 3,000 degrees Fahrenheit to most debris and for most of the lethargy in commercial demand in this country were removed from their homes by periods of serious problem of over-production would be confronted here, apart from whatever danger might arise from the slackened consumption in the rest of the world would tend to make our market the dumping ground for cheap-labor producers the world over.

Every Home Owner His Own "Weather Man"

Now that the American public is becoming air conditioning conscious it is easy to envision many departures from present day methods by home owners. Already, according to the Holland Furnace of Holland, Mich., manufacturing that many per- sons believe they are passing over a perfectly satisfactory atmosphere in search of fresh air. Investigations conducted by Dr. Immagine have convinced him that the air is neutral to the extraordinary temperatures of 3,000 degrees Fahrenheit to most debris and for most of the lethargy in commercial demand in this country were removed from their homes by periods of serious problem of over-production would be confronted here, apart from whatever danger might arise from the slackened consumption in the rest of the world would tend to make our market the dumping ground for cheap-labor producers the world over.

TIME TO WAKE UP!

Many patriotic and revolutionary societies have sprung up in the United States in the past few years. Many of the purposes of these societies are commendable, but there is something about the whole affair that is not quite right. Only the American government can look out for the best interests of America. Any private organization contemplating the expenditure of more than a nat- ional defense is an outrageous proposition.

If the Allens program is adopted in its entirety, the Secretary says the American government not only the state yards will be working on new naval vessels valued at $1,000,000,000 during the 1937 fiscal year, begin- ning in July.

Chairmen Britten of the House Committee is doing his part to ad- vance the naval program. Some of the ships he has suggested embody ideas basic as to the findings and agreements of the London conference. Some activities serve to encour- age public confidence in the agents the navy represented the interests of America in a fundamentally im- portant relation. Indications at pres- ent are that the Nation's first line of defense is much to be improved and strengthened.

ARGUMENTS DOES NOT HELP WATER

A cattle of our constitutional right in the United States to own firearms, recently presented an exhaustive article in which he attempted to prove the necessity of laws to prohibit private ownership of firearms by showing that a larger proportion of people are murdered with guns in this country than in other nations.

By the same line of reasoning, he could probably show that more people per thousand are killed by automobiles in the United States, that more people per thousand are burned to death in fires and that more people per thousand meet with accidental death in connection with bathing, wagon and living had nothing to do with it. Our prosperity was due, he declares, to the fact, that we made our money by speculation—in other words it all off one another. It was through Wall Street plunging in stocks that Americans acquired twenty-five million motor cars. The workers in our factories spent their idle hours watching the ticker. They took their profits and bought bath-tubs, radios and automobiles.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee will be well advised, some time ago voted to postpone consideration of the World Court proposition until the session of the Senate in December, 1931. The se- lection of the personnel of the next of the members of the Senate with comparatively few exceptions. The Senate is now composed of men who have been in the public service for many years. Their views are largely formed and crystallized. They have been engaged in getting up excuses for themselves, or selling cakes, with rough- in them for donation parties. For the benefit of all interested, I wish to say that the ladies of Nezwond cleer- ed enough to pay the balance due on the organ and had six dollars left. They will buy dishes with this money. The dishes are to be the property of the society—to be used for social and donation parties. If any friend from Banks should come to any of them and has any of them, and has any conscientious scruples about eating from dishes bought with money raised in such a sinful man- ner, he had better bring his own with him. The proceeds of the next supper, after paying the fiddlers, hall rent and other expenses will be de- voted to the purpose of buying good religious tracts, to be distributed to the heathen. If the Baptist ladies of Charlevoix will donate the proceeds of their next rag sale, they will be a big help. If this is done I un- derstand that thirteen new ladies will be appointed missionary to distribute them. I am well acquaint- ed with the folks and can place them where they will do the most good. Yours in prophesy of tracts, I would advise the holding of a large quant- ity of "Hayden's Call to the Un- converted." Brother Hayden has only one there that needs a call of that kind.

POLITICAL HORSEPLAY

In Pennsylvania, where an important phase of the recent political campaign was enforcement of dry activities and the public service com- mission, it is now proposed to force- fect the "people's rights" by substi- tution of a "fair rate board" for the public service commission. In other words, a change in name of the reg- ulating body is supposed to result in a change in the type of public ad- ficials.

What a joke! In a name going to make a superior class of citizen- ship from which to draw public ser- vants? This move shows how hope- present politicians are when they have to manufacture such an issue to secure public attention.

An unbiased observer is inclined to laugh up his sleeve.

Good news is found in the fact that definite measures are being taken throughout the nation to bring industrial activity back to nor- mal. Road issues for public works to the extent of $450,000,000 have been approved, most of which will be spent on construction in the im- mediate future.

The wise man does a lot of listen- ing.

ADMIRAL BYRD'S AIDE ON LECTURE PLATFORM

Chief Yeoman, Charles Lofgren, U. S. N. R., personal aide to Rear Admiral Byrd on the Antarctic expedition, spent the holidays with his wife and son in Washington, his first vacation in three years. Mr. Lofgren will travel together and confidential capacity during the period of preparation for this trip to the South Pole and accompanied him there. Since the expedition's return he has been with Admiral Byrd con- stantly, traveling over 12,000 miles in tours of this country, and manag- ing many details of his public and private affairs. Mr. Lofgren has finished his work with Admiral Byrd and will soon begin a lecture tour.

TELEPHONE SERVICE
MAKES A NEIGHBORHOOD OF MICHIGAN

The Michigan Bell Telephone Company is constantly improving the scope, speed and accuracy of its service, that it may continue to furnish "the most telephone service, and the best, at the least cost to the public."

"THROUGH slim wires, etched against the sky . . . through cables carry- ing thousands of lines . . . hundreds of thousands of Michigan people keep in touch with each other . . . talking from house to house . . . city to city . . . peninsula to peninsula . . . distances that require much time for ordinary travel, but over which your voice is carried to its destination in a fraction of a second.

Over his telephone, a retailer in one city keeps in touch with wholesalers in another. A housewife calls friends who live nearby. A son at school in Ann Arbor enjoys weekly telephone visits with his parents. A state legislator in Lansing transacts business by telephone with an associate in the upper peninsula. No matter what the distance, Michigan's great telephone system will carry your voice to almost anyone, anywhere, at any time you may choose.

Today, most Long Distance telephone calls are completed while you hold the line! Today, your telephone will connect you instantly with more than 800,000 other telephones in Michigan alone! Yet, telephone service is available to anyone at remarkably low cost.

The Michigan Bell Telephone Company is constantly improving the scope, speed and accuracy of its service. Its work of contributing to the welfare and prosperity of the commonwealth goes on with increasing purpose and pace.

Harbor and River Meeting—A public meeting of the citizens of Charlevoix came off at the post office on Monday evening, said meeting having for its object the considera- tion of the question of memori- alizing the Legislature for an ap- propriation of State Swamp lands to aid in the improvement of the river- mouth of Pine River. The meeting seemed to think that sixteen sec- tions would be a liberal appropria- tion, and a committee was appointed, consisting of Messrs. F. H. Green, Jr., Holmes and Phelps Brown, who were instructed to frame the petition embodying our wants to the Legislature. President of Michigan Bell Tele- phone Company announces expansion program for 1931.

MICHIGAN BELL HEAD ANNOUNCES PLANS FOR 1931

PRESIDENT FORAKER SAYS YEAR'S EXPANSION IS PRO- NEERED ON BASIS THAT CONDITIONS WILL IMPROVE

NEW PLANT PLANNED WILL APPROXIMATE $22,000,000

MAINTENANCE AND OPERATION WILL COST LIKE AMOUNT. PROGRAM ADDS WATER- IALLY TO INDUSTRY OF STATE

The Michigan Bell Telephone com- pany has planned for 1931 an expen- ture of approximately $22,000,000 in new construction, Burch Foraker, president of the company, announced.

This work has been engineered on the basis that business and economic conditions will improve as the year 1931 advances.

The extension and expenditures will be made from daily receipts from the new plant and equipment. Mr. Fora- ker said that the plan does not call for borrowed money nor will it involve any increase in rates.

In addition to the construction ex- penditures for new telephone plant planned for 1931, there will be an ap- proximately $22,685,000 for main- tenance and operation of the com- pany's service in Michigan, bring- ing the total expended expenditures of approxi- mately $44,685,000.

The telephone progress engineered for the year includes the completion of new buildings at various points, construction of additional long dis- tance lines and cables and the addition of considerable dial central office equip- ment. Many of the improvements are necessary for the purpose of extending facilities and further improving the present high grade of service.

Business conservatism engaged in 1931, will cost, including dial, $4,- 500,000 for new central office and out- side plant facilities, and approximately $14,000,000. Some extensive plant expenditures planned will take place in 24 cities, including $1,150,000 for Grand Rapids, $1,132,000 for aerial cable, $1,- 045,000 for aerial wire, $1,000,000 for underground conduit and $1,045,000 for underground and aerial cable.

Long distance telephone plant con- struction projects contemplated total $1,800,000, including $400,000 for addi- tional circuits to stormproof cable.

Stormproof installations for the year under this program will include 44,000 poles, 240,000 miles of bare copper wire, 8,400,000 feet of wire strand, 1,- 117,000 feet feet of dist conduit, 29,- 000 apparatus, and 1,045,000,000 cubic feet of wire in cables.

It is planned to place new central offices in services during 1931 at Saginaw, Benton Harbor, Big Rapids, Detroit, Scottville and Bessemer. Large additions to local exchanges facilities are engineered at many points, among them being Detroit, Ann Arbor, Battle Creek, Grand Rapids, Jackson, Kalamazoo, Lansing, Ypsilanti, Bay City, Pontiac and Mus- quito. Among the long distance facilities projects under consideration are the building of a cable between Saginaw and Reese, and completion of that new under construction between Grand Rapids and Big Rapids.

The Michigan Bell company now has 675,000 instruments in service, of which 292,000 or 42.75 per cent, are now operated by dial. The ratio of dial to the number of telephones in service is anticipated during the next twelve months.

When candidates put their cam- paign promises in writing and sign them before a notary it will be a good sign.—Houston Post-Dispatch.

Song of Robin Hushed During Winter Months

In the spring the robin is the first of our birds to arrive. He is the "calling harbinger" and his "Cheerily! Cheerio !" in the treetop is our sentinel greatness of happier days and finer aims. It is Dr. Talmage, in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. Now, for many years our visitors have been passing into the woods of South Carolina and south Georgia and Alabama—into Texas and Mississippi and Louisiana. In great courage to their advent in our zone, they do not sing a note. It may be for this reason that our northern prejudice is not cherished there with the same earnest affection that we feel for him, although his usefulness is justly regarded. He is just another bird—and they have so many—rather furtive and quiet. We take no marked notice floating about in the low shrubbery near the ground in southern Mississippi in January, and from their complete silence and clandestine manner could hardly take them for the birds we know so well.

Perhaps they are overawed by the marching bird, which is the petted warbler of the South and does not entirely suspend his melodious arias even in mid-winter. Because the robin receives distinguished honors where they are so relishing and self-effacing that they are left to their own sections, may account for their

"City" of London Small in Area

Washington: In what city is the capital of England?

"It's natural response is London. The precise answer is Westminster, says a bulletin from the National Geographic society.

If the word "city" is omitted the answer, of course, is London, for the London of common knowledge, the location of some 7,500,000 inhabitants, is the region of Cheapside, it includes the city of Westminster, with its architecture buildings, and it also includes the suburbs west of London, a fine growth in the center of the great metropolitan area.

"The city of London proper comprises the 677 acres recently thrown its time-hardened lord mayor's show, within this year was embraced by a band of real American Indians in full regalia.

"The city, with an area of only a square mile and a resident population of 13,000, is the smallest of the 29 divisions of Greater London.

"The city is to the fire extent and the most interesting part of London. Within it does not contain the noble Gothic mediaeval building, nor Westminster Abbey, nor any of the royal palaces. It is the commercial and banking center, the sovereign control and by Sir Paul's cathedral and the Tower of London. It has two of England's most famous institutions in it, and essentially the district in which the Romans founded Londinium. Wade, John Gilpin drive down, define many of its streets and gates, such as Aldgate, Bishopsgate, Moorgate, and Temple Bar, are preserved in street names.

"Tourists in London are aware of a difference when their wanderings lead them from one of the other metropolitan cities of London into "The City." The streets are narrower and more winding, and the atmosphere is somehow charged with activity and hustle.

"In the very midst of "The City" lands that mysterious thoroughfare, The Old Lady of Threadneedle street from the bank to the Royal Exchange, a building so typically New York's Stock Exchange. But it is only a short pause. The real street excitement is almost midway between the former, between Threadneedle and Throgs neckle street.

"You may read the pulse beats of the world in Fleet street, London's venerated newspaper and press association center.

"The London Stable of Gargant, enormous steamer colliers in and the present steamship "The City" with the borough of Brentwood, and among the farthest point that ocean tonnage and across the Thames. More than 2,000 vessels and 120,000 people do their ginar over it daily.

"The traditional, or half of the east portion of the city of London, would be known as the old but elsewhere there the royal business of "The City" is carried on. It should be pointed out, however, that this is not the administrative center for metropolitan London. While the 1931 major and Joshua 10 "Did Miss Adam and His Children" was a good deal concerned as to what was going to become of the children after she passed on. When he passed out of the picture, he had been a aggressive leader, he had performed marvelous military feats and was, in part in into the comfort and veneration, just about the whole thing. But he was growing old, his strength was waning, he realized that his time was short, his nature just about at an end, and he was worried. What was going to become of the undisciplined mob, when he was no longer its leader?

"Why," the Lord said to him, "I won't never a man which died which I didn't have another man to step in his place. Now, I ain't, low-cards' pal, Joshua, 'cause you been a mighty good man. LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

In the mechanical department of a New York newspaper, the tech ain't up a great, which use to fairen large proportions. The typewriter of the yesterday is now a thing of the past, and in a speakeasy. Here, after a bit of refreshment, he begins to bring order out of the parts, slapping into proper pocket and asserting that he had to do it each. After listening to him heard, a fire men slipped quietly out of the place. Interested in his conversation, they evidently figured that he would go back to the newspaper office.

Instead of that, the man went quietly and peacefully home. Hid in the meantime another employee of the paper, who was of about the same height and general appearance, passed the speakeasy on his way to work. Before he reached the office he was set upon by several thugs who knocked him down and proceeded to go through his pockets. Evidently disappointed, they threatened him with a terrific beating unless he told them what he had done with the $1,000. The poor fellow didn't know what they were talking about. the thugs departed before his predecessors. They left most of his clothes off and even took off his shoes. Finally, something scared them away, and he was left to find his way home as best he could, dressed in his underwear.

In taking a trip to a football game the other day, I noticed in walking from one platform car to another, that the vestibules were pretty well filled with women of all ages who had travelled for some place. In almost the buffet smokers left of course, he became curious to see. His curiosity led him to passage to the rear, the conductor patiently explained that a baby had been born in one of the private compartments, by virtue of its mother's illness. No such provision is made for women. But I imagine the time is swiftly approaching when the railroad companies will have to do something about it. I believe there are already a few private rooms used by a small lounge dressed entirely strictly to women.

Over on third avenue in New York there is a shop which is run for purposes of charity. Here persons who have small articles they cannot use or want to give away. Whatever comes in is repaired, cleaned, scrapped to the uttermost and then sold, usually at ridiculous figures, the proceeds go to the poor.

Not long ago this shop received a contribution in the shape of a small painting. One of the women who frequented their services looked at the gift and then looked at it again. She was sure enough of her own judgment to take the canvas to some of the art experts. They endorsed it. Some of the authors known to their craft and confirmed the woman's opinion. It was an original Whistler.

This put the head in an embarrassing position. Having determined that somebody somewhere would be glad of the picture knew what publicity it would have, perhaps it would be the loser. It was felt the only route to follow was to offer it to a genuine connoisseur. Shortly a wealthy connoisseur finally was sent to the palace to inspect it to the satisfaction of the owners. Then it was decided to auction it off. Bidding was spirited and when the hammer fell it was knocked down for $4,000. Not bad for a gift, and the lucky recipient was overjoyed at her good fortune. Now she knows what she is going to do with the money. She is going to buy a new hat.

Castoria corrects CHILDREN'S ailments

WHAT a relief and satisfaction it is for mothers to know that there is always Castoria to depend on when babies get fretful and uncomfortable! Whether it's a teething, colic or either fright upset, Castoria always brings quick, comfort, and, with relief from pain, restful sleep.

And when older, fast-growing children get out of sorts and out of condition, you have only to give a dose or three of this pure vegetable preparation to right the disturbed tendency quickly.

Because Castoria is made expressly for children, it has just the mildest ailment of action. Yet you can always depend on it to be effective. It is almost certain to clear up any minor ailment and prevent trouble in the youngest child the moment it starts. So it is the time (time to think of it) when a child has a normal tongue, is fretful and out of sorts, be sure to get the genuine with Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package.

ICE RINK OPENED ENJOYED BY MANY

Local ice skaters are taking a full share of enjoyment days and nights at the rink built on the public school grounds under the direction and control of the board of Education.

A set of rules promulgated by the board posted at conspicuous points for the guidance of the public, the cause so far last winter are by to be observed both as to skating and conduct in order to enjoy the rink and the privileges extended. The rules are reproduced for the benefit of the skating fraternity and are as follows:

Rules For Skaters

1.—Profane language will not be tolerated, either on the rink, or in the School House.

2.—The use of tobacco by minors, is strictly forbidden.

3.—Skating on the rink shall be in a circular manner to the left. The center and extreme corners of the rink shall be used by fancy skaters or beginners.

4.—When the rink is crowded, it is expected that all skaters will confine themselves in a manner that will not hinder the enjoyment of others. This refers in fast skating, cracking the whip, playing tag and such other pastes.

5.—School students below the ninth grade shall vacate the rink each day at 4 o'clock unless they are accompanied by their parents. Upper classmen will be permitted to remain until 10 p. m.

6.—Persons without skates shall not be permitted on the rink.

7.—Hatchets, or axes of any of the above suggestions will cause suspension from the rink for a period designated by the Board of Education.

They make the rink the outstanding recreational center of Charlevoix.

Monday Hours—1 to 6; 7 to 10 p. m.

Kindly observe that when refuse are on pond there is to be no skating.

Dan P. Gallagher received word Monday of the death of his niece Ocelia Vallier Long at St. Ignace.

The freighter "Rambler" made a trip to Charlevoix Friday for groceries and other supplies for the Island.

The High Wind Indians were here this week with their boats. There is no ice to Lake or Harbor to lodge them.

Capt. R. J. McCann left here Friday, with the tug "Venus" for Manistee, where he will put her in winter quarters.

Sister M. Henrietta returned Friday from Grand Rapids, where she was called by the illness and death of her brother.

MRS. HARRIET M. HULME PASSES

DEATH DUE TO HEART FAILURE, MONDAY

Funeral service was held for Mrs. Harriet M. Hulme, Wednesday afternoon, from the Metcalf residence on Clinton Street with Rev. J. E. Lockerbie officiating.

She was born in Canada about sixty-eight years ago and was the sister of the late Herbert Hulme and for a long term of years a local resident.

Her death was due to some heart derangement with which she has been troubled over an extended period.

Mrs. Hulme is survived by two sisters, Mrs. Charles Arnold and Anna Metcalf and two brothers, Frank of Gaylord and George Metcalf of Manistee.

MEN'S CLUB TO CONTINUE

Those attending the meeting held at the M. E. Church Monday evening, to discuss plans relative to a reorganization or continuance of the Men's Club enjoyed a wonderful fish dinner prepared for the occasion, with this followed by informed talks along the lines under consideration.

It was the sense of the meeting that the Club continue the work and that meetings be held on the first and third Tuesdays of each month, rather than weekly as in the past as it was anticipated, due to some, the meeting was not as well attended, to the fact that several meetings of interest were called for the same evening as was that for the Scout Court.

W. C. T. U. SPECIAL DAYS

The National W. C. T. U. asks all members to observe Thursday, January 8th as a day of prayer for Temperance. Letter into day of Friday, January 16, will be celebrated in every local union in Victory Day—the eleventh anniversary of national prohibition. The celebration here will be in the Congregational Church. Detailed plans will be given next week.

DEVILED OYSTERS

Chop fine 1 pint oysters. Put in saucepan with 1 teaspoonful of melted butter and a gill of cream. Season with cayenne and salt and ½ cupful of rolled cracker crumbs. Put on the stove and allow to simmer 5 minutes, stirring gently. Then put in a baking dish, sprinkle bread crumbs and bits of butter over top, and bake until top is a rich golden brown.

HARD TIMES AND THE HEN

Hard times means nothing to a hen. She just keeps on digging worms and laying eggs, regardless of what the newspapers say about conditions. If the ground is hard she scratches harder. If it's dry, she digs deep. If she strikes a rock, she works around it. But always she digs up worms and terra them into hard-boiled profits, as well as tender broilers. Did you ever see a pessimistic hen? Did you ever know of one starving to death waiting for worms to dig themselves to the surface? Did you ever hear one cackle because times were hard? Not on your life; she saves her breath for digging and her cackle for eggs.

POLAR BEARS LOSE TO MIDLAND 27-18

ter said. The team, then tightened up and held their own for two quarters, at the end of the first the score being a 11-11 tie. Davenport got two baskets for the Polar Bears, Brown two, Superman one, and Kipke a free throw. One of Brown's was from more than half the length of the floor.

During the second half Midland forged ahead, making sixteen points and held the local team to seven. For Charlevoix in the last half Davenport got a basket and free throw, Brown a basket and Ikens two free throws. The score was then Midland 27, Charlevoix 18. Laughy was high for Midland, with 11 points, Goldstein got 8, McClintock 5, and Madill 3. For Charlevoix Davenport made 7, Brown 6, Ikens 2, Superman 2, and Kipke 1. Brandon and Cooper also played.

Hugh Mayne and Charles Ingersoll handled a difficult pair of refereeing and umpiring in fine shape.

The preliminary was played between two Sunday school teams. The Methodists beat the Baptists by a close score of 16-14. Mc'all officiated and a nice game. During the first half the Methodists experimented trying to find the working combination by frequent substitutions. The Baptists led at the half, 10-6. They continued the scoring in the latter part of the game, but closely by the high class work of Gordon Eaby. The Baptist team was composed of Carey, Beardsley, Yeomans, Arnold and Swartout. The Methodists started Driggett, Rees, Richardson, Erhardt and Shaw. Ashton and Raby played.

Next week the high class game the strong Manistee Iron Work' team here tonight (Thursday, January 8). Another great game is expected, but we do not fear this team as much as did Midland. Charlevoix should win Manistee was here last week, but Charlevoix won at Manistee. The result is a toss-up, but we favor the locals. They won't take two defeats in a row. A good preliminary will be arranged, probably with the Petoskey Y. M. C. A. team.

some pretty teamwork. That tied the score, and Charlevoix was ahead all the way after that. McCall made a free throw and then a field basket a minute later. On the next play Nowak got the ball from center, pivoted, and threw shot the ball right through the basket just as though there was nothing to it. He made three more baskets in the game, and McCall helped out with one. Throughout the game the score stood Charlevoix 18, Gaylord 9. When the quarter was ended.

All the information the following substitutions were made for the local team: Davenport for McSauby, Chew for McCall, Arcella for Smith. During the second quarter Gaylord made a free throw and a basket. Charlevoix managed to get a basket by by two free throws and a basket. Nowak and two baskets by Arc. The score at the half was 23-11.

The third period was featured by closer guarding than the first. Only three baskets were made, Gaylord making one and Nowak and Arcella getting one. The Charlevoix regulars were sent back into the game at this time, and Charlevoix started another offensive attack. Nowak made five baskets and Arc getting two. But Gaylord also made a strong effort in the scoring three baskets. The score was Charlevoix 41, Gaylord 20.

That's just the idea Gaylord entertained before the game started. The score was any set-up, in spite of the score. The issue was as large as Charlevoix. It was merely, and in practice all hope showed they could make basket when given an opportunity. They have defeated Mancelona and other teams in their district, and left a close decision to East Jordan. But Charlevoix had just a little too much for them to cope with.

Nowak led the scoring with 22 points. Arc had 12, and McCall had 5. But it don't think that the rest of the players couldn't make a few baskets if they tried more often. We keep a personal record of the number of times each player misses a basket. We find that Smith and McSauby only attempted to shoot a basket twice apiece during the whole game. Arcs missed four, McCall two, and Nowak two. Chew and Davenport missed about nine apiece, although we did not keep such a close record on them.

Businessmen at Boyne City say the Gaylord game was the best ever played there, and we called them close but fairly.

The preliminary was won by the Atkinson first team, which beat the local reserves 22-7. Beattie, Clark, Kirby, Potter, Grisell, Superman, McCann, Dick and Livingston played on the local team.

Charlevoix will send both the first team and the reserves to Boyne City tomorrow evening to compete with that school for the championship of Charlevoix County. We expect to bring home the bacon.

SPORT NOTES HERE AND THERE

By Newman

Before the Midland game we had thought that the world would come to an end if the Polar Bears met with a defeat. They were beaten, but it is no disgrace to be knocked down a notch by a team like Midland has got. We expect the Polar Bears to win their next three games. They play Manistee tonight, Big Rapids next week, and then they tackle Alma.

There was a rumor last week that the famous "Kiki" Cuyler would play with Midland against the Polar Bears. The boys all told a few stories everything how he had got his nickname. The best of the lunch was a tale by the Old Kidder himself. When the Kidder was managing the World Champions a few years ago (baseball, not basketball) a rookie came up and asked for a job. When asked his name, he muttered a little and replied "Kiddy-Cuyler". The other players began to call him "Kiki".

Following the same plan of nickname, we find that the Polar Bear team is composed of "Dada" Davenport, "Goodie" Cooper, "Kicky Kipke, "Ike" Ikens, "Hurbut" Brown, "Sleepy" Superman, "Tata" Brandon, and "Babe" Beaudoin. The manager is "Tata" Todd. A new record in human nomenclature.

The high school team is still rolling along, still coasting as a result of a victory in the opening game with Traverse. But if the boys don't want to keep going, we expect that they will have to win on the level and open the throttle pretty wide in a few times. Perhaps they also might be too much to coast over, and perhaps not. But there comes a time when they say but a team must go down in defeat. Competition in this region is so close that even a "set-up" team may be defeated sometime during the season, especially in basketball. We do not say that Charlevoix this year is not capable of going through the season unbeaten and untied. But we know the boys will have to show more than they have so far to beat Boyne City or Petoskey during here. These are the teams they have to watch out for. Traverse City is improving fast, and will be here soon for revenge. And then we must remember that some of the other teams on the schedule are known as "set-ups" either.

It seems that the high school reserve team is very sensitive to the attitude of the crowd. On their home floor they play like champions, but on the foreign floor they just stand around. They lose to Alanson on the opponent's court, but they trounce Boyne here. Well, at least they are getting a fifty-fifty break.

RESORT BUSINESS IN THE STATE

The Statisticians are at it again, this time they have Michigan's tourist and resort industry under the microscope and tacked out on chart paper, according to Hugh J. Gray, secretary of the Michigan Tourist and Resort Association, Grand Rapids.

Figuratively speaking, and before the ink was dry, the figures became lost in obscurity in the volume of this industry, the following facts were released:

Population Boosted

Michigan, with a population of 4,842,325 persons, has a five per cent boost in the number of people within her borders during the tourist and resort season, some will think this figure conservative.

However, even five per cent when analyzed as only a Statistician can, becomes interesting. For instance, a five per cent increase means 250,000 people spending not less than five dollars a day for this and that—close to nine million dollars weekly, and just about $100,000,000 during the entire season.

Many Jobs Created

The above statistician next arrived at the astonishing fact that to care for this number of tourists and resorters, over and above the normal population of the state, required about 25,000 individuals engaged in the service of some kind, summering jobs. The opinion was ventured that a majority of these jobs were done by men and women of high school and college age, many of them earning money against the next school village term, and that each job netted those employed a total of two thousand dollars during the season.

Tourist Industry Builds Roads

The total automobile mileage on Michigan roads attributed to tourist travel was 300,000,000 miles, which results in a gasoline tax of $450,000 paid into State and county highway funds. This money becomes immediately available for the maintenance, improvement and implement of state-county and highways.

WORST DAMAGE BY COMMON INSECTS

East Lansing, Jan. 7. — The mass attacks upon farm crops made by hosts and army worms attract a great deal of attention at the time of their occurrence but in reality the losses caused by them are small in comparison to the damage done by such unsensational insect pests as weevils, cut-worms, maggots, and the many varieties of beetles whose unfailing appetites cause an unceasing stream of requests for help from the entomology department at Michigan State College.

Members of the department spend a great deal of their time in trips to farms about the State in answer to calls for help and to plan ways to control the damage being done. Most of the loss could be prevented if proper control measures were used before insects increase too greatly in numbers, according to C. H. Hibbard, a member of the department.

To acquaint farmers with the proper methods to use to lessen the losses from insect pests, the department held 62 meetings which were attended by 2,801 farmers during the past year. It is possible that not many more farmers by holding the meetings than by visiting individual farms.

The insects which cause the greatest damage have the same habits in every part of the State and it is possible to give advice to a large group of farmers at a meeting and by means suggested for insect control are equally effective upon every farm.

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Thus saith the Lord, thy Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel: I am the Lord which teacheth thee to profit, which leadeth thee by the way what thou shouldest go" (Isa. 48:17).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "The leading point of divine Science is that God, Spirit, is All-mind, and that there is no other might nor Mind; that God is Love, and therefore He is divine Principle. To grasp the reality and order of being in its Science, you must begin by reckoning God as the divine Principle of all real reality in reality."

POLAR BEARS DOWN MANISTEE 30-18---HIGH SCHOOL BEATS BOYNE CITY 14-11

DECISIVE GAME

BEAT THEIR OLD TIME FOES EASILY

PLAY BIG RAPIDS TEAM NEXT

Charlevoix Polar Bears Are Now Playing Together Better Than Formerly

The Polar Bears were victorious last Thursday evening over an old time foe that used to hold quite a powerful "jinx" over the locals We are referring to the Manistee Iron Works' team. The Charlevoix team was the winner last week to the tune of 30-6. That is quite a bit different from the result of the game ago, for instance. At that time Manistee won twice. The first time was on the Manistee floor. The score of we remember right, was 67-18. Charlevoix did much better on the local floor, and the score was 58-24, Manistee favor. Last year the Manistee suit was an even break, Charlevoix winning 27-18 on the Manistee floor, and Manistee winning by about the same margin here. The teams are composed of just about the same margin here. The teams are composed of just about the same players as they were so.—they first met Charlevoix is now playing together better than three years ago, but Manistee would also be winning had not the Polar Bears evolved a defense that will stop Manistee's attack. Charlevoix will probably win the return game also and the two tonics will be even for the time being.

Charlevoix started the game with Davenport, Ikens, Brown, Kipke and Superman playing. Manistee started Anderson Nitesky, Champers, Zimmerman and Winnesky. Ikens fell and sprained his ankle during the early part of the game and was replaced by Cooper. Ikens will be out of the game for a few days.

Manistee made more of its points at the beginning of the game, while the Polar Bears seemed to have more endurance and broke loose for baskets during the middle and last part of each quarter. The visitors made the first basket after a short scrimmage. On the second play Davenport collided with an opponent and both went down. It was like two racing cars crashing into each other. Davenport did not seem to be permanently injured. At any rate, he tossed the ball through the hoop for Charlevoix a minute later to tie the score. He made one more for the Polar Bears during the first quarter. Manistee made a basket and a free throw during the game, then 5 to 4, Manistee.

Manistee made a basket at the opening of the next quarter, and then was forced to watch Superman and Kipke each get one in the same period. The score was 8-7, Charlevoix. After that both teams scored

MEETINGS HELD

EVERYONE SEEMS HIGHLY INTERESTED

TO ESTABLISH CREAM ROUTES

Several Successful Gathering Have Been Held in Various Sections

Very satisfactory progress is coming made in preliminary plans for the organization of a farmer co-operative Creamery to serve both Antrim and Charlevoix counties. At the present time fully 250 farmers have signed membership agreements. The work is being carried on by a live and loyal group of solicitors in all the townships in the area. No definite promises are being made. No unpaidable statements have been uttered. Everyone seems to be highly interested.

The Creamery expects to establish cream routes in all heavy dairy sections to gather the fresh cream direct from the farms. High quality cream is a necessity if premiums for the 92 score butter is possible. As a result of a very recent meeting it is planned to have five substations equipped with the Co-operative Creamery. These sub-stations no doubt will service their own patrons and the truck from the Creamery will gather the cream from each of these stations. Several local meetings have been held in various sections of the County. It is expected that the Creamery will handle over 100,000 pounds of butterfat the first year, as a result of propagating with few highly successful Co-operative and Independently owned institutions already operating.

Farmers, this the biggest activity presented in years for your consideration Consider it well. Learn all about it. Then help by either organization and what it can do.

Remember Thurs. If nothing is done about it you will continue to receive from 8 cents to 7 cents less for every pound of butterfat you sell to the buyers. Other co-operations in the State are receiving 6c per pound over $20.00 on a Co-operative Creamery and get from 3 cents to 7 cents more, a pound for butterfat than you get at the present time.

Which course of action do you wish to follow?

THIS ALL TALKING PICTURE HELPS TO SPREAD WORD

It is the word that took perhaps per centimile by storm in New York, Chicago Philadelphia, Boston, St. Louis and points West It is the word that became so popular that it got itself made into a very successful picture. After one has seen the tremendously funny acting of the cast one has a very definite idea of the meaning of the word.

The picture is based on the original 21 railway plays, by James Barrie and Ernest A. Rolfeson. No better comedian than Grace could have been chosen for the role of Mrs. Dearth, one that is pre-eminent for its great work in "Three Harmonys", "The Man Who Came" and "The Bride and I."

A FRATERNAL CONTEST

CRIBBAGE FIGHT — EIGHT NIGHTS SCHEDULED

Members of the fraternities I. O. O. F. and F. & A. M., according to present plans will engage in a series of cribbage contests, preliminary to the inter-sports for which are now under way, with the first meeting scheduled for Monday night, January 19th, to be at the I. O. O. F. temple.

Unless some change is made the schedule provided will be held Monday nights week with the place of meeting alternating between the F. & A. M. and I. O. O. F. temples, with the first, as above stated, at the I. O. O. F. temple.

Present plans call for a series of eight meetings, with eight games to be played at each of the joint sessions and the final total score to determine the relative merits of the contesting teams and players to the 16-0 game.

CHERRY GROWING IN LEELANAU CO.

INTERESTING STATISTICS IN CHERRY INDUSTRY

Compilation recently made by Jessie Chapin, a county assessor, of the acreage and number of trees and amount of cherries grown in Leelanau County as well as some other data, will be of interest to Charlevoix County Cherry-men as the time contemplating enlarging in the business.

In his report Mr. Chapin credits Leelanau county with a total cherry orchard acreage of 2,647.

Four cherries apparently are in favor with Leelanau growers. Of these there are 155,340 trees in bearing and 153,000 that have not commenced their yield.

Sour cherry trees number 16,887 and of these 2711 are not yet in bearing.

The yield of sour cherries for 1929 was 2,485,800 pounds and for 1930, 4,286,760 pounds. This will be heavily increased from year to year under normal weather conditions

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER THUMBULL

Winter regular season has been en-tabulated, airplane travel is becoming an matter of course as taking a day's run. Especially in this time of short trips. I sometimes think that women's little more naturally to air travel than men. Most of them can, and will, go to somewhere in a hurry. The woman, like a hummer, is a wanderer and ready to dodge and hesitate this just enter with go in for the higher things of life. Women too only performing the commercial air lines had been 1000 their jobs.

While fishing off in New York from Philadelphia recently, I saw operator a woman who had what I thought was something quite unusual in her line. It occurred to me at least I was. It is unfortunately that it is not quite true, or is it exactly unusual, but I saw what I saw. I think that it was a true thing. It was one of those things that you see and you don't know whether you believe your eyes or not. I saw it with my own eyes, and I believe it.

I was sitting through England and Holland and Germany also the last summer where time seemed to be slower. Holland and Belgium were inexpensive. I was with a group of people who had been brought up in the city and had had no intimate acquaintance with trees and flowers and growing grain. Not one of them had ever seen this before or been on knickabout. They didn't know alfalfa from any tassel, and the difference between rye and wheat and barley as they saw those plants growing in the fields was a puzzle that not one of them could solve. There were no memories that dated up to their age of the scent of hay drying in the sun or saw the dust rising where threshing was going on. The sight of spider web, and sunlight, and galloping grasshopper in the road side did not take them back as it did me to the flower-covered pastures of my childhood. I was reminded of them by the sight of a grasshopper's wings in the sunlight, but they had never seen a grasshopper. Finally the dust was about completed when the young lady who was about to be married was offered a full dress suit.

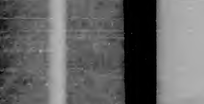
"Think of it," Mr. Williamson told him. "You get this $140 dress suit for nothing. It would have cost you $200 if you had been for another negro minister who mattered."

"Yes, and life everlasting," thereby precluding any possibilities of a shark and man fight.

Despite this lack of human bait, Mr. Williamson said that he was evidently to prove his old contentions that a shark will eat a man and that he does not have to turn over on his back to do it.



That Schoolboy Complexion

Small Town's Only Legal Resident

Arundel on the Bay, a small village not far from Washington, is reported by the company manager to be the smallest incorporated town in the United States, having but one legal resident. Here we have Capt. John Wells, the one and only citizen of this tiny town. Living alone, the captain is his own chief.

Complication in Heirship Suit

Lincoln, Neb.—Mrs. Pauline F. Stuverz' claim to a $25,000 estate hinges on the question of when conditions a living child

The question was raised in a law suit started by Mrs. Stuverz to settle a $25,000 estate of Harry J. Stuverz, husband of Mrs. Stuverz, who was killed several months prior to the birth of a child to Mrs. Stuverz by the late husband.

Determination of whether or not the child ever actually lived will be the question for the decision of the estate, the greater part of which consists of a judgment against the firm by which Stuverz was employed when he died of his accidental death.

Mr. and Mrs. Casper Stuverz, mother and father of the deceased, contend they are entitled to one-half of the estate as the property of their daughter-in-law, the mother claiming that the baby was born alive and that she and the baby are the only heirs.

At the hearing witnesses for the mother contended that heart action was sufficient proof of life, while attorneys for Mr. and Mrs. Casper Stuverz claim clinical proof of respiration action was necessary to establish life.

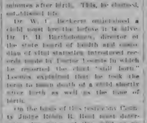
Dr. J. J. Lamson, an attending physician at the hospital, testified that the baby never cried for air or to be released after birth. This, he claimed, was evidence of life.

Dr. W. L. Beckers maintained a child must breathe before it is alive. Dr. P. H. Burkholder, director of the state board of health and coroner of Lancaster county, testified that tests made by Doctor Loomis to which he had subjected the child, and Doctor Loomis established that he took the lungs to the mouth of a child after it had been dead as well as the time of birth.

On the basis of this testimony Judge Paul E. Good must determine whether or not the child was born alive and the validity of the mother's claim to the estate.

The case which was designed by many legal men as a test case, because of its novel, complex and interesting issues, has been taken under advisement.

WAR WORKERS UNITED



Mrs. John Reginald McLean, who while serving as a war nurse won many decorations and was called little "Angel of France," was married the other day to Jos. Logan, Atlanta lawyer and Yale Harvard Skull and Bones initiate, and they left for a wedding trip to northern Africa. Mrs. McLean and Mr. Hale first met on the battle field of Soissons in 1918 while they were engaged on ambulance duty. They met again in Paris on an errand of relief, and again at Bar-le-Duc in Barbara, Calif.

Blasting Lowers Producing Costs

Specialist Tells How to Remove Stumps and Boulders on Farm.

Lowering the cost of crop production by blasting stumps and boulders out of tilled fields to make the land more easily cultivated, with increased yields, is safe and inexpensive practice when certain rules are followed, says Virgil Overholt, extension specialist in agricultural engineering at the Ohio State university.

If planning to blast with the stumps or boulders remaining undisturbed in the soil, Overholt says, the charge is either dislodged or does not go off at all. The size of the charge is the smallest that forms off into innocuous soil and in severely dry weather.

Most accidents in blasting operations are due to premature explosions which have failed to go off at first and to investigate a delayed charge and a dog found a hole in the head should be at least a foot and a half deep and the charge is placed about a muscle and a half to three the stump or boulder. Tamping with the tamper or battery is used it is safest to use wires at least 200 feet long.

Always face the charge so that possible explosion will be in the direction of the open. Never smoke while handling dynamite, be sure and allow plenty of time for cut of reach of children.

Blasting Boulders.

In handling boulders, he suggests that the first step is to locate the line of greatest resistance. This is done by placing a charge at the center on the stone and putting sharp six inches of soil, adding mud over them. Stump blasting is usually done by placing the charge deep under the stump, or, where there is a tap root, by boring a hole to the charge in the center of the root. However, if the wood is hard the charge may be placed on one side at the root. The charge may be tapped with metal after a hole before it is covered and tamped into the dynamite and mud placed in the hole.

Discover Two Sources of Potato Blackleg

The popular theory, held by potato growers for many years, that diseased seed tubers are the principal source of infection of blackleg, has been exploded by Dr. J. G. Leach, plant pathologist in the U. S. Department of Agriculture, who has been working with the diversity of the investigation of the disease. Two other important sources are now known, he says, the soil and the cuttings of the mother's tubers.

Dr. Leach's experiments have shown conclusively that the blackleg fungus can survive in the soil for a year. He has found that it can live on decaying tubers and in tops, well-drained soil a layer of washed rock is formed on the seed tuber which accomplishes much to the blackleg bacteria.

Legislation to Improve Quality of Dairy Milk

Ontario has recently introduced legislation the purpose of which is to limit the milk offered for sale in that province. All milk must contain at least 3 per cent butterfat if it is to be sold. The use of any substance in milk that is not distributed in liquid form for human consumption is also prohibited, as is the addition of water to milk. For milk retailing privately at 15 cents per quart, the minimum butterfat content is 3.5 per cent, for each cent in excess of 3 per cent fat above the standard, and for milk testing below 3 per cent fat the price must be reduced by 2 cents per quart. Supplies of milk for each month of 31 per cent below the standard.

Asparagus Seed Will Germinate Very Slowly

Asparagus seed germinates very slowly, it is usual to wait two to six weeks from time of planting until the plants appear above ground. As a result it is often difficult to get a stand of plants in this season and also because there is quite a variation in the young crowns it is advisable to sow the seeds a little more closely than is desired in the crowns when one year old into the permanent location. The seed bed should be worked until fine and mellow and the same as many weed seeds as possible. These will be killed in the final preparation of the plot for seeding. Asparagus germinates very slowly at 60 degrees.

Queenless Bees

When a swarm issues with no queen and there are no eggs less than three days old and no queen cell started this swarm is hopelessly queenless. This condition is often found in the spring, and bees may be induced to unite in time the swarm. A frame of brood containing cells less than three days old will cause the workers to raise their own queen, or the quickest method is to buy a laying queen from a breeder ready to introduce.

Killing Thistles

Salt water applied in a strong enough solution will kill Canada thistles. To do so, it must be strong enough to kill all other vegetation and it is likely to make the soil sterile. Where only small patches of thistles are present, farmers have exterminated them by salting their cattle in the thistle patch. The pan spread on the ground is licked up by the cattle and in serving the salt and the trampling the thistles are severely cut back.

The Boyhood of Famous Americans

By F. V. Fitzgerald

Julius Rosenwald

Peddling wasn't as profitable as the ten-year-old boy thought it would be so he sold it. The wares he had to offer didn't seem to appeal particularly to the busy housewives of Springfield, Ill., under and soon exasperated customers had called on them before the bad appeared. Those who needed such wares as Julius Rosenwald could be stocked up with Home Nail encouraging, to be sure.

But the youngster wasn't discouraged for long as a trade was in the air. He wanted to do something that would bring in more money, and he finally hit upon the idea of buying feathers and selling them to the manufacturers of feather beds. He was successful from the start. He bought the feathers from the housewives who had been saving them for years, and he sold them to the manufacturers who had been paying high prices for them. Then, as time went on, he began to buy other kinds of feathers, and he made a good profit on all of them.

His experience combined this for a measure.

"Probably," he replied at last, "probably in the west room in that—a dressing room, which she used as a bed room. We always have the same rooms when we stay at Short's. There's a sitting room, a bedroom, and a dressing room." Alison Murdoch always has the dressing room. I should say sho'd be in there when my wife and Stella went into the bedroom."

"Did you find out from the tall porter if they took anything away with them?" inquired Crofts. "Any light baggage—anything of that sort, as if they, or one or other of them, meant to stay away for the night?"

"I didn't inquire," replied Sir Eliot stone. "But I'm sure they didn't. The porter would have mentioned it. I've known for many years—and my wife during my 34-a own position when they went to Short's, for one or two nights, and this morning that 34-a was occupied by Mrs. Shorts for one night only, so I would never have occurred to me."

"And that was—what?" asked Crofts

"He and he alone could have told me for sure what he called an hour at the pictures," answered Sir Elliot stone. "Whether it didn't seem to stand like. He explained that just before the picture Mr. Short's, in the direction they took, is one of those long-drawn-out affairs, where, I'm told, moving pictures are shown. But I can't think—"

"Which may take it that they didn't go there," remarked Mayborne. He glanced significantly at the two policemen. "Didn't have to be gone into carefully," he murmured. "You know."

"We don't know that Mrs. Elphinstone was ever found at Short's—when Mr. Elphinstone goes back there," said Crofts, pointedly. "And I'm quite sure Mrs. Elphinstone didn't."

"Oh, no," interrupted Mayborne. Then, in an undertone, he muttered: "But I guess he won't! Mr. Elphinstone walked away and called out of sight.

"I want to show you something—something that I have in my pocket. Here it is," he went on, producing the refrigerator hook and laying it on the table. "Tell me!—have you ever seen that article before?"

Mayborne stared at it, turned it over, you, Mr. Mayborne—as you think it possible they have been kidnaped?"

No one laughed. Mr. Elphinstone's simplicity was too apparent. He was very grave, too, in his simplicity, and Crofts was equally grave in replying to his ingenuous question.

"No, Mr. Elphinstone, no. I don't think it possible for three women to be kidnaped, even in London," he answered. "I think you'll find that they went out on some business of their own, and that they had good reasons—again of their own—for not returning. Do not be ask you for a little more information—when your wife and her daughter went into the bedroom to talk in private, where was Alison Murdoch?"

"There is no doubt that this is your wife's brooch?" he asked. "After all, I suppose that one of these things is very like another."

"That's to my wife's property," affirmed Sir Elliot stone with more decision of will and manner than he had asked like it. "I've seen it by her myself, years ago in Inverness. It is one of those rare pre-prevalent affairs. The stones are of a rather uncommon sort of cairngorm, the silver mount-ed, I thought the pair to a sort of oddment-and-ends shop in Inverness, and I bought it for a trifle—very well. But to be sure—I haven't seen my wife herself for years."

"Mrs. Elphinstone didn't wear them, then?" inquired Mr. Crofts.

"She thought them old-fashioned and rather too heavy," replied Mr. Elphinstone. He looked on Crofts' hook, as curiosities are said they'd been made into the fashion."

"Probably," remarked Mayborne, "and probably not. Mrs. Elphinstone—men's minds, you know, at the moment—were a little out-of-date. She'd remember that she ever did wear them—but I have no doubt what was then—but I have no doubt what she'd put on. She knew me by one of the pair. Now, where did you get it?"

"Let it suffice for the moment, Mr. Mayborne, that I got it," said Crofts, accidentally," answered Mayborne. "Tricked it up, you know—when I was in Inverness. Never mind more. Just now—"

He released the brooch in his pocket and rose, looking round at the rest of the party. "Now, what's next?"

Nobody made any suggestion. The next words came from Mr. Elphinstone.

"I wish I knew what has become of my wife!" he said, rather plaintively. "Can no one think of anything to do?"

"There is no sought for her," said Constable Bell. "Nothing to be done, sir. Why, we'd better be doing something, I think," he murmured. "The night's getting on."

Mayborne agreed to Rectangular. "It's time we were all in bed," he said. "Just say—let us dig up Mrs. Elphinstone, if Mrs. Stone has returned home."

"I will go," said Sir Elliot stone, relieved to the rest of us waited until their return a few minutes later. But they were not.

"No news," he announced. "They haven't been back. Nothing's been heard from them. But—no they set out from there I suppose there's the best room from which to conduct operations."

"We're going there, anyway," said Constable Bell, "and the lighthouse's got to be looked! Perhaps Mr. Elphinstone will come with us?—we may find some clue from somebody that's been left."

We left the house, Constable, across the street, Johnson was still loafing about. He stared Mayborne's way at what Mayborne did in the way of signaling to him I did not make out, but Johnson loafed away, and still further away, and faded out of sight.

"No need to keep that thing handy round," observed Mayborne to Crofts, for Castinger—I think I shall put cuf-

He hurried out—to return within a minute or two with Mr. Elphinstone. And, for the first time since the beginning of my acquaintanceship with him, Maythorne showed evidence of something close akin to excitement.

"Here's a new development!" he exclaimed as he came into the room. "Mr. Elphinstone has been to his room and followed me here to tell me that Mrs. Elphinstone has disappeared!"

We all turned on Mr. Elphinstone. He was shaken out of his usual dreamy-ness; he looked perturbed, dismayed, puzzled, wholly at a loss. Starting there a little while he had been away, thinking at us as if unable to make us out or capture us, he nodded, saying irritatingly at Maythorne's announcement. But he was sufficiently master of himself to confirm it, in words.

"Since last night!" he said. "This afternoon—yesterday! I didn't notice ordinary—and unpleasant—and somewhat trying—but only to not know what to think—or do!"

Crofts, who had given the two policemen a meaning glance on hearing the news, pushed a chair toward the new comer.

"Sit down, Mr. Elphinstone," he said. "Perhaps we can help you a bit. When did Mrs. Elphinstone disappear?"

Mr. Elphinstone dropped into the chair, and looked round us again.

"Just as!" he said. "The fact is the whole thing is really most confusing. Last night, of course! We left Miss Apperley's and went to Short's hotel. We had dinner as our arrival, in the private sitting room. It was a little time after that that Stella came. She—"

"Mrs. Merchison came then, did she?" interrupted Maythorne.

"Mrs. Merchison came, Stella—my step-daughter—yes. She came. She and my wife and Alison Murdoch were in the bedroom—to talk. I heard them talking. But I went out—downstairs, you know—I thought I'd smoke a cigar in the smoking room. I was down there perhaps an hour. I strolled about with a man who turned out to be a solicitor—interesting conversation. Perhaps I was a little longer away. Then I went back to my rooms again. There was nobody there—nobody at all! I thought perhaps Mrs. Elphinstone and Stella had gone to the dressing room, and I went there, but they were not to be seen. I waited some time. Then, as they didn't appear, I made some inquiry. And I found—really most astonishing—that they had left the hotel! Mrs. Elphinstone and Stella, and Alison Murdoch had all gone out of the hotel some time before, evidently soon after I had gone down in the smoking room."

"Position Mr. Elphinstone," broke in Mr. Maythorne, "you are not—you don't mean to say you've left your wife's property?"

Mr. Elphinstone looked at him as if he were simply much as a man looks with wonders that anybody shouldn't know as much as himself.

"Alison Murdoch!" he answered. "Oh, my dear sir, Alison Murdoch and followed me here to tell me that Mrs. Elphinstone had gone to London! Most accidents in blasting operations are due to premature explosions which have failed to go off at first and to investigate a delayed charge a dog found a hole in the head should be at least a foot and a half deep and the charge is placed about a muscle and a half to three the stump or boulder. TIME OPPORTUNE TO CONSIDER STARTING ON FAMILY SEWING

HERE'S hoping that the first weeks of the new year will be profitably spent in getting the family sewing in motion. Of course, the you-know-what is the best time to begin to do a matter of looking up new materials and studying the latest patterns and attending to the numerous details which have to do with supplying out a successful dressmaking campaign.

Usually it is the little folks whose needs are considered first, by home-sewing mothers, and the spring fabric collections are apt to be studied from the viewpoint of what's prettiest for little daughter's school and playtime frocks. Just now, for practical and low-priced wear, crepes, both printed and plain, also ginghams attract considerable attention, and the outstanding fold found there in their high fashions and the fact that they are used together in the striking contrast, such as brown with yellow, pink with blue, green with white and so on. Handel's Life Saved by Turn of Sword's Point

Had it not been for the large size of a fat brass button on the coat of George Frederick Handel, "The Messiah" might never have been written.

When Handel was eight-and he was playing the harpsichord in the orchestra in Hamburg, Germany, and affecting the performances in the absence of the regular conductor, Johann Mattheson, a young friend and great composer, wrote the opera, "Cleopatra," which was then produced.

The composer himself played the part of Antony in his opera, and after that point in the play where the latter dies, he was to go to his mistress Cleopatra and comfort her. Handel was a novice to go to the theater and he refused to play on his piece at the keyboard.

Mattheson was indignant and the composer was a duel to the early hours of the following morning. Towards were the weapons and Mattheson would surely have pierced the breast of Handel had not the latter struck the sword point.

"The Messiah" was written 38 years later under fortunate inspiration in 24 days. Handel, however, had mastered now for his reminiscences at Handel. He wrote many anecdotes about his friend and fellow musician, among them the story of the pinned sword point.

He and Handel went together to compose for the various parts of an gaunt, when Handel was seventeen and Mattheson a few years older. Arrived in Lubeck, they learned that the successful candidate was expected to marry the daughter of the retiring organist. The lady is not to be described but he was rich and that he and Handel made all haste to free the field.

Nature Improved On in Production of Orchids

Science and sentiment are mingled in the commercial production of hybrids.

Successful application of the Knudson method of seed germination, the scientific crossing of varieties of the most beautiful and fragrant species, and the strongest than those produced by nature in the high reaches of the Andes and the mountains of Asia, are the achievements of the modern orchid specialist. Orchids are the favorite flowers of the Empress Eugenie, of Queen Victoria, of Queen Alexandra, and of many other women of royal birth.

Cultivating these bizarre effects are the aisles and rows of hothouses, the fumes and vapors of household or of velvet which are enlarged with thin strips of flat fabric-like fur cuffs, collars and so impressively, their novelty

Nourishment in Low Cost

It is a mistake to think that the most nourishing foods are the most costly. Splendid meals can be made of cheap cuts of meat, vegetables and fruit in season. Soups and stews are especially nourishing and economical. Cereals, such as oatmeal, rice, barley, macaroni, spaghetti, hominy, cornmeal, whole wheat flour, buckwheat flour, and breakfast foods are cheap and nourishing. Dried beans, peas and lentils are rich in nourishment. Eggs are a cheap source of protein. Milk is one of the most nourishing foods and should be used in some form every day.

Splendid Returns From Clearing Timber Lands

Much Florida land was land of no farming value in being covered and thereby prevented for cultivation. Although the expenditure of a comparatively small amount to remove not only some of the pine stumps which have been left in the ground after it was cut, but also for the timber. The ground left in this condition is not attractive to white settlers, but the removal of the stumps makes it available for agricultural purposes. As the market value of the timber now is sufficient to pay for the removal of the stumps many of the timber owners are now having this done.

The ax is much more going on in the state than ever before. Many thousands of acres of land are being cleared and the owners are receiving handsome returns for the timber and stumps which they remove.

Nourishment in Low Cost

It is a mistake to think that the most nourishing foods are the most costly. Splendid meals can be made of cheap cuts of meat, vegetables and fruit in season. Soups and stews are especially nourishing and economical. Cereals, such as oatmeal, rice, barley, macaroni, spaghetti, hominy, cornmeal, whole wheat flour, buckwheat flour, and breakfast foods are cheap and nourishing. Dried beans, peas and lentils are rich in nourishment. Eggs are a cheap source of protein. Milk is one of the most nourishing foods and should be used in some form every day.

ON ENTERING THE NEW YEAR

Every American should be very cautious to make 1931 a prosperous and progressive year.

Never have our resources, from the standpoints of capital, men or industries, been so great. Never have we possessed such abundance of potentialities for future economic security.

The nation is beginning to emerge from the depression every month, and the indications are a very big year. There is nothing fundamentally wrong with business. The people are of the same energetic type of the men behind guns for future business conquests during the war trade may, in coming years, not mean the difference between prosperity and depression that the United States has been accustomed to, but it will be a business. More satisfactorily conditions may be realized from a home industry such as a water or power plant supplying a municipality where a good income is possible, and economy as essential, but not otherwise. Owning and operating one's business is always accompany the Government's unwarranted invasion of the business world, which is destructive to the public employer, the personnel and the public auditor. These are the first to feel the effect of shrinking public revenues and the last to recover from them.

MAIL SERVICE EXPENSIVE IN THE EARLY DAYS

Nowadays when one can send a letter from New York to San Francisco for two cents and get it there by airplane for a few cents more, it is interesting to note that in early days our mail service was something else again. In writing of its high cost one unsatisfactory mail service in early America, G. L. Waddill sets down in the current issue of the National Republic:

"It cost eight cents to send a letter thirty miles in the early days of the national history. It cost a quarter to send a letter from Boston to New York; longer distance were proportionately higher.

"The rates quoted applied only to a single sheet of paper. The use of envelopes had not then come into its vogue, letters being written on one side of the page, folded and addressed on the reverse side, thus made fast with string or sealing wax. Postal free were taxed, not on weight, but on the number of pages. It mattered not if the sheet was large enough for a double load, as long as it was but one, it was subject to the minimum fee. letters containing two pages were charged double and so on. All enclosures, even printed circulars, were charged as extra pages. Needless to say, there was little direct mail advertising done.

"Postage was not prepaid the fee being collected from the addressee at his destination. With strangers, business was on a strictly C. O. D. basis but postmasters had a convenient way of trusting their friends and acquaintances, sometimes to their sorrow, as was indicated by numerous advertisements in the newspapers warning that if postal debtors did not pay their long overdue accounts no more letters would be delivered to them.

"Postmaster who refused to settle had been disappointed in the contents of their mail. The system prevents the fundamentals of equal taxation. That it is championed by men high in our legislative councils, and defended by lawyers of conspicuous ability is surprising. This fact makes the subject one of serious consequence, and emphasizes the extent to which political pressure and interests can obstruct even obvious public opinion and influence the best judgment of able statesmen. For instance, those places upon the demands of an irresponsible electorate. How far will the tax limit be carried before the barriers will be chased?"

QUACK PRESCRIPTION

Political cure-alls loom at hand. There are not to be disappointing in prescription as has been proved by the fact that some of the panaceas that were enthusiastically encouraged during the period of short time ago have proved to be duds. Congress usually has before it most fungoid proposals that would put the Government into business and scrap it into competition with its own citizens. The present economic depression has been severe, in lacking scheme to lead to railway management and investment and in merchant marine adventures.

Aside from its cost, the early panic service was very unsatisfactory in speed and regularity. Roads were absolutely bad and inclement weather would hold up the mails for days and weeks at a time. Mr. Remarks' column he actually the words, "I've had a helluva fit."

"Robert, was the one definite record written by one person who personally had her tongue in her cheek when she gave her age as 22 years.

"It must have been a newly-wed who enthusiastically announced to the world that he was 'Happily married.' He appeared to be so elated over the fact that his remark was, 'Advice all young men to go and do likewise.'"

"There was a different story told by a young lady who gave as her definition that of a stenographer, age 22, 'Single, thank the Lord.'"

NATIONAL AFFAIRS
From P. Litchert

Now that the year 1931 is upon us the people of the United States are naturally wondering whether prosperity will return to us before the year 1932 rolls around. The predictions at the beginning of this year are much more cautious and temperate than those which were made for us by the experts, economic and otherwise at the beginning of the year 1930. Seven months ago, although we had just passed through one of the biggest stock market upheavals in history, there was almost unbounded optimism. We were told that the market crash was only a corrective process, that business remained fundamentally sound and that with the curbing of the viciousness we would be on the high road of prosperity and progress once more. The pessimists turned out to be entirely too optimistic. There was indeed a temporary pickup of business in the spring months but it didn't last. Prices of farm products and raw materials kept slumping and by June it was evident that depression was still with us in an intensified degree of severity. There followed the drouth, revolutions in Latin-America, political upheavals in Germany, Russian dumping, and lastly of things calculated to bring us to the brink of despair.

Now the year 1930 has been completed and the fifth has arrived for the optimists to get busy again. But the pessimists are more numerous than the optimists, and they are ignorant as to what 1931 will be. A bad year as they were certain twelve months ago than 1930 will be a good year as they were certain twelve months ago than 1930 will be a good year. Having been mistaken then perhaps they will be mistaken again and 1931 will not be so bad as they think. Certainly the gloom is thick enough in most places to lead one to believe that it cannot be lifted. At the "experts" tell us that this is always the case at the end of a bad year and is an indication that we will soon be on the upgrade again.

This is a consummation devoutly to be wished, and is a reasonable expectation. Impossible as he necessarily conservative guessers do not believe that we will soon arrive at the dizzy heights of 1929 and early 1929 again, they feel that a change for the better is coming before many months. While they do not believe that business in the first half of 1931 will be so good as it was in the first half of 1930 they believe that the discovery, they are confident that the last half of 1931 will be better than the last half of 1930 of lamented memory and that when we begin to compare current business with the poor records made in that period we will see that we have really turned the corner.

In the meantime it is some consolation to remember that we have been through worse times and have had far more. New Years, even though most of us are entirely pessimistic just at this time. The New York World on the first day of the year editorially called attention to the fact that fifteen years ago, on New Years day "millions of young men were crouching in dirt and frozen trenches, many dead, dying on long battle lines" and that nobody then could "see the end of the inferno." Certainly we have reason to be thankful that dark and gloomy New Year period is behind us.

It is perhaps encouraging to know that we have dispelled our illusions, that we have again come to the realization that the way to accumulate wealth or a modest competence is not by speculation without labor, but by sober thought and honest hard work. It is on the latter of these foundations that real prosperity is built. For a time in 1928 and 1929 many of us thought that wealth was to be acquired in some new way by simply buying securities and waiting for them to go higher. We have now learned better, and if we profit by the lesson the suffering and discomfort will not have been in vain. As the World well concludes, there is now hope because "We begin to learn that there is very much to learn. We begin to tell ourselves that illusions are not forsight, that ignorance is not courage, that guessing is not thought, and that as we go back to work we shall get no written result. But I hope to be reasonably sure."

Then there was the husband who admitted beating taken unto himself a wife twelve years ago. In the Remarks' column he actually the words, "I've had a helluva fit."

"Robert, was the one definite record written by one person who personally had her tongue in her cheek when she gave her age as 22 years.

"It must have been a newly-wed who enthusiastically announced to the world that he was 'Happily married.' He appeared to be so elated over the fact that his remark was, 'Advice all young men to go and do likewise.'"

"There was a different story told by a young lady who gave as her definition that of a stenographer, age 22, 'Single, thank the Lord.'"

SOAP AND SOUP FOR UNEMPLOYED

One of the most surprising developments of the unemployment situation is revealed by the welfare workers. The larger cities have been providing sleeping quarters, soup kitchens, and other forms of relief to jobless men and women for years. What the jobless homeless want almost as much as soup, they say, is soap.

No one who has been dealing with unemployment, or personal hygiene in general problem, will deny the close relationship between morale and personal appearance. So long as self-respect is maintained a man can courageously and hopefully tramp the streets for a job. It is only when he is unable to hold on to that narrow ridge of respectability symbolized by a clean collar, that he loses confidence in himself and the world. The plight of the no-shirt white collar worker is admitted to be one at the pressing problems of unemployment and life is partly because of his moral necessity to keep that collar white.

"The men know that the one who weathers the competition and gets the job in times like these must have all the assurance he can muster," says a Y. M. C. A. employment secretary. "To keep his chin up he needs to look, feel, and be presentable and clean. A bathed body and clean clothes, although they may be borrowed, help him keep the flicker of hope in his heart."

TIGHTENING UP IMMIGRATION

There is a good deal of complaint from across the big waters and from relatives in our own country because of the flood of people who want to get into the United States find the bars set up against them. This is due to the fact that a good deal of the latitude is placed in the hands of the Federal authorities who in accordance to the demand of organized labor and some of the large employing industries do not look with favor upon admitting a lot of foreign laborers at a time when several million Americans are unemployed. These new applicants for citizenship will simply have to wait!

CHARLEVOIX - MICHIGAN

PROPOSED UNIVERSITY AT MACKINAW CITY

We have known for some time, and, we believe, have once or twice referred to the fact, that Mr. Edgar Cankling, formerly of Cincinnati, now of Markinaw City, proposed eventually to turn over his large tracts of land in that vicinity for the building and endowment of a great National University. Recently Mr. Cankling seems to have made a practical movement in the matter. Thus at the recent Methodist State Convention, Mr. C. made a speech, the course of which he spoke of the natural advantages of Mackinaw with Mackinaw City for commercial purposes, and Detroit, Ann Arbor and Lansing for cultural purposes, and University, painting everything in flamant; Miss Florence Smith, as "Queen Esther;" W. A. Smith, as Mordicai; Mrs. G. F. Brown as Mordicai's wife; Miss Alice Kansay as Prophetess; Wm. Kansay, as Haman; Mrs. F. G. Hines, as Zeresh; G. B. Brown as Harbuna, supported by a full chorus.

F. G. Hines sends the editor a box of Catawa Old Song. Mr. Hines and the editor have been friends for many years, and we would regret to have anything occur to sever the tie of friendship, but we cannot but feel that the gift of a bar of soap was hinted at as a personal reflection. If Mr. Hines had done this thing to the editor of the Arizona Kicker, pistols and coffee for two would have promptly followed! But we will drop the matter.

One day last week a party, consisting of Frank Sears, A. A. Peters and Frank Chaloupka might have been seen (as the story goes) wending their way into the woods south of town with guns and game bags. They soon all landed for rabbits, and the last two of the party named were headed for their companion—Ben George Miller—who was found among his available assets a stuffed decoy rabbit, an excellent counterfeit of the real live article. Mr. Peters mounted the decoy in the bottle pocket of his hunting coat, and the party started for the hare hunt. When the hunting ground was reached, the decoy was set upon a level in a good position, and Peters and Chaloupka led their companion to a favorable point for a shot. Then they separated, and Chaloupka, being the luckless one, was left to watch the decoy, which he did with a will. Soon a rabbit was discovered, and, alas, the decoy cost him several cigars. With the enthusiasm of those in search of the rabbit, and the sawdust was scattered upon the snow. Frank Sears was near by, and the live rabbit ran down his way he fell before the ingenious gentleman's unerring aim. With the intention of saving the cigars eyes of the decoy, Chaloupka dragged it back and this was left and found it was found to be a person to verify the fact that he had no lung on the premises he was headed for Sears. Chaloupka tried to purchase silence, but it would not do. Mr. Sears was in on the deal, the scheme to humiliate Sears were George Miller and Ralph Partridge, who now plan a partnership shop and to malicious intent.

THIRTY YEARS AGO

Just think of it, while we are digging snow and robbing our ears, the Charlevoix Township board of the iron bridge in this city which is to be replaced by a new structure the coming spring. The price is to be $1,200. The bridge was built in 1873 at a cost of $3,100—$3,500 of which was paid by the county, the balance by the township. The bridge, as far as the township is concerned, is practically as good as ever. Its displacement at this time is due to the vehicle wonder funds of the state and the demands of economic for a wider draw. South Arm must need larger when the new bridge is built, and it will just fit the spot.

Down at the S. S. S. headquarters the members are just now discussing with considerable interest and incredibility the compact entered into between Capo, Dave Campbell and Bill Pinconi. As near as can be ascertained these two worthy mariners have formed a partnership which, in winter, the capital stock of which is to be invested in one cross-cut saw. Having been offered the jobs of cutting down several dozen trees in one of Harry Nicholls' lumber camps, these honored members of the S. S. S. are to "bach" the next summer's wood—not make a bluff at it. Another feature of the compact is the winning of John Pagan's team to haul in the wood—making a tidy sweep of the Pagan, Wilson and other members have made arrangements with George Priest to get a photograph of the shippers and their saws in the woods. The matter will be calmly watched by the Society.

Sheriff Billy Pearson is already making preparations for those who is keeping his prisoners under the floor of his kitchen. Mrs. P. has been assured that the sentence by a short letter kitchen that steadily grew stronger. Investigation proved that it came from beneath. Help was called and a board taken up. The prisoner proved to be a skunk—beautiful but redolent. Of course, the animal retreated to the farthest part of the cell and Sheriff Billy had his prisoner yet, and various plans to "parole" him were being discussed. The Sheriff thinks the smell beats that of the campaign last fall.

Theresa—Do you intend to accept Harry?

Matilda—That all depends upon circumstances!

Matilda—Why, his, of course!

DEPARTMENT OF CONSERVATION NOTES

Lansing, J an. 14.—While the owners of property or their authorized agents have the right to take or kill carnivorous animals without permit at any time of the year, if these animals are doing damage to their property, they can dispose of these animals only on instructions from the Director of Conservation.

Disposition of the carcasses and pelts of all bears and other animals caught in the act of destroying property is entirely in the hands of the Department, according to the Law Enforcement Division, and instructions for disposition are given when the case is reported to the local conservation officer.

Found guilty of hunting in a declared wild life sanctuary in Oakland County, Alfred Bailey paid a fine with costs totalling $76.

The penalty is the heaviest imposed for this offense in more than a year.

Bailey was arrested by Conservation Officer Herbert J. Crook and was tried before Justice F. J. Gollhardt of Ortonville.

Non-residents anglers' licenses issued in 1930 expired December 31, and non-residents desiring to fish through the ice now must secure a 1931 license. These licenses are now being distributed by the Department of Conservation to all license dealers.

The buttons of the new licenses are brown.

While non-residents are permitted to purchase license, to fish with hook and line through the ice, they are not permitted to operate or own other means of catching fish.

Alanson G. Ahlstedt has been appointed Deputy County Clerk, and E. H. Green Register of Deeds for Charlevoix County.

A. Raid—A fauna fox belonging to George Keys, Esq., made a raid a few nights since and killed twenty-two chickens and one turkey of the property of Amos Fox, Esq.

Dissolved—As will be seen elsewhere, the copartnership of Bisbing ton, Nelson & Co. was dissolved on the 1st of November last.

New Firm—The new firm of Lovejoy, Whitney & Co. is composed of the following named gentlemen, to-wit: Geo. W. Lovejoy, F. L. Lyon, L. Lewis and J. H. Page.

Change of Route—Senator Chandler has introduced a bill into the U. S. Senate to change the terminus of Jack on Lansing & Saginaw Railroad from Grand Traverse Bay to the Straits of Mackinac.

Wood—A Fox & Co. are getting out nine thousand cords of pipelier wood, and one thousand cords of shipping wood. A Hutchins & Co. are getting out one thousand cords of shipping wood.

Grist Ground—We are happy to announce to our country friends that in a short time they can get their grists ground on any week day, at the mill of Geo. W. Baterly & Co., in this village.

The Outside—The reason why there is nothing on the outside of this paper, is owing to the fact that the publisher has been in the premises left on last Monday to attend the murder trial at Traverse City, and the "Devil" was left alone to get out the paper. How well he has done it he will leave you to say.

Personal—His many friends in this village and vicinity were glad the other day to greet once more the well known face of E. Kinney, Esq., of Whitewater, Wis., and who is now one of the new firm of Lovejoy, Whitney & Co. Mr. Kinney's arrival and his purposes to run the shingle and grist mill during the winter (provided enough of both can be secured), has already set a thrill of joy to the hearts of many of our citizens, not only in this village, but throughout the whole country round. We trust he may be successful will commence operations at once by securing logs enough to run the saw mill here next summer.

Capt. Harmon Miller, of the Point Betsy Life Saving Station has been down during the past week visiting his many friends.

Friday and Saturday evening of past week at Lewis Grand Opera House, "Esther the Beautiful Queen," Elegant solos superb choruses and extremely dramatic climaxes. The great event the winter. The rehearsals are progressing, and the production is approaching a degree of perfection of musical study, string and dramatic action action that promises well for the entertainment. This is actually the most elaborate and elegant musical entertainment in the history of Charlevoix. The cast embraces Mr. Ben Hur, of Elk Rapids, as King Ahasuerus; Lydia Bates as Queen Vashti; painting everything in flamant; Miss Florence Smith, as "Queen Esther;" W. A. Smith, as Mordicai; Mrs. G. F. Brown as Mordicai's wife; Miss Alice Kansay as Prophetess; Wm. Kansay, as Haman; Mrs. F. G. Hines, as Zeresh; G. B. Brown as Harbuna, supported by a full chorus.

Mr. Sears was in on the deal, the scheme to humiliate Sears were George Miller and Ralph Partridge, who now plan a partnership shop and to malicious intent.

THIRTY YEARS AGO

Just think of it, while we are digging snow and robbing our ears, the Charlevoix Township board of the iron bridge in this city which is to be replaced by a new structure the coming spring. The price is to be $1,200. The bridge was built in 1873 at a cost of $3,100—$3,500 of which was paid by the county, the balance by the township. The bridge, as far as the township is concerned, is practically as good as ever. Its displacement at this time is due to the vehicle wonder funds of the state and the demands of economic for a wider draw. South Arm must need larger when the new bridge is built, and it will just fit the spot.

Down at the S. S. S. headquarters the members are just now discussing with considerable interest and incredibility the compact entered into between Capo, Dave Campbell and Bill Pinconi. As near as can be ascertained these two worthy mariners have formed a partnership which, in winter, the capital stock of which is to be invested in one cross-cut saw. Having been offered the jobs of cutting down several dozen trees in one of Harry Nicholls' lumber camps, these honored members of the S. S. S. are to "bach" the next summer's wood—not make a bluff at it. Another feature of the compact is the winning of John Pagan's team to haul in the wood—making a tidy sweep of the Pagan, Wilson and other members have made arrangements with George Priest to get a photograph of the shippers and their saws in the woods. The matter will be calmly watched by the Society.

Sheriff Billy Pearson is already making preparations for those who is keeping his prisoners under the floor of his kitchen. Mrs. P. has been assured that the sentence by a short letter kitchen that steadily grew stronger. Investigation proved that it came from beneath. Help was called and a board taken up. The prisoner proved to be a skunk—beautiful but redolent. Of course, the animal retreated to the farthest part of the cell and Sheriff Billy had his prisoner yet, and various plans to "parole" him were being discussed. The Sheriff thinks the smell beats that of the campaign last fall.

Lansing, J an. 14.—While the owners of property or their authorized agents have the right to take or kill carnivorous animals without permit at any time of the year, if these animals are doing damage to their property, they can dispose of these animals only on instructions from the Director of Conservation.

Disposition of the carcasses and pelts of all bears and other animals caught in the act of destroying property is entirely in the hands of the Department, according to the Law Enforcement Division, and instructions for disposition are given when the case is reported to the local conservation officer.

Found guilty of hunting in a declared wild life sanctuary in Oakland County, Alfred Bailey paid a fine with costs totalling $76.

The penalty is the heaviest imposed for this offense in more than a year.

Bailey was arrested by Conservation Officer Herbert J. Crook and was tried before Justice F. J. Gollhardt of Ortonville.

Non-residents anglers' licenses issued in 1930 expired December 31, and non-residents desiring to fish through the ice now must secure a 1931 license. These licenses are now being distributed by the Department of Conservation to all license dealers.

The buttons of the new licenses are brown.

While non-residents are permitted to purchase license, to fish with hook and line through the ice, they are not permitted to operate or own other means of catching fish.

There May be Poison in YOUR Bowels!

STEP out tomorrow morning with the fresh buoyancy and brightness that comes from a clean intestinal tract. Syrup Pepsin—a doctor's prescription for the bowels—will help you do this. This compound of fresh laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other pure ingredients will clean you out thoroughly—without griping, sickening or discomfort.

Poisons absorbed into the system from scraping waste in the bowels, cause that dull, headachy, sluggish, bilious condition; coat the tongue; foul the breath; sap energy, strength and nerve-force. A little of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will clear up trouble like that gently, harmlessly, in a hurry. The difference it will make in your feelings over night will prove its merit to you.

Dr. Caldwell started boxed troubles for forty-seven years. This long experience enabled him to make his prescription just what pain, weapon, old people and children need to make their bowels help themselves, its natural, mild, thorough action and its pleasant taste commend it to everyone. That's why "Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin," as it is called, is the most popular laxative drug stores sell.

A NEW NATIONAL PARK Where HISTORY WAS MADE

Moore House, Yorktown, Va Where Cornwallis Surrendered

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

WILL 1932 be more or have a new national park, a park created for its historic interest, picturesque, romantic interest, portable, than any other? That is the question now being pondered by the members of the National Park Service, and upon the decision of Congress will depend largely upon the actions of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., who is now paying for the restoration of the colonial capital of Virginia.

Of first interest in the park authority's assessment of Jamestown, "the birthplace of Virginia and of the United States." What the part in the nation's history this town is among to the following characteristics:

May 13, 1607—The first permanent English settlement in America is made at Jamestown by colonists sent out by the London company.

September 10, 1609—John Smith begins to serve as president of the council, the chief executive of the colony.

October 4, 1609—Capt. John Smith sent poisons for England, leaving George Percy as his successor. Percy's active residence is Jamestown.

October, 1609—June, 1610—The "starving time" of which only 60 of the original 500 settlers survived.

June 7, 1610—Percy and colonists sailed from Jamestown for England, but the next day after returned with Lord De la Warr, who brought supplies and additional settlers.

1612—John Rolfe began the cultivation of tobacco.

April 1, 1614—Pocahontas was married to John Rolfe and peace with the Indians prevailed until her death.

July 30, 1619—The first legislative assembly in America met at Jamestown.

March 22, 1622—The great Indian massacre led by Chief Opechancanough, brother of Powhatan, took place and cut a population of 1,240 whites, 347 were slain.

June 24, 1624—The royal charter of the London company was declared void and Virginia became a royal province.

August, 1631—Sir William Berkeley commissioned governor of Virginia.

March 12, 1655—The colony surrendered to representatives of parliament.

1676—The year of Bacon's rebellion in which Jamestown was burned by Bacon September 16, 1676.

April, 1699—Middle Plantation, now Williamsburg, made the seat of government by an act passed by the general assembly.

At present only a few remains of the historic town are left. Most interesting of these, of course, is the square brick tower of the old remains of the church built by Lord De la Warr in 1639 and burned by Nathaniel Bacon in 1676. This brick structure has surrounded the frame structure in which Pocahontas had been baptized and given the name of Lady Rebecca and in which she was married to John Rolfe. Second only in interest to the church tower is the monument built in hope to get this land prior to October, 1931, when the site-supplied fifteen specially recorded to good old Manteca with the rare antiseptic. was made. The chronology of Middle Plantation which became Williamsburg is as follows:

1620—The general assembly enacted a law providing "that the Middle Plantation be the place for erecting the College of William and Mary in Virginia."

1626—After the burning of Jamestown the city Francis Nicholson established Middle Plantation as the seat of government.

1698—The arrival of Governor Nicholson, who surveyed by the general assembly and an act was passed directing the building of the capital at Middle Plantation. Two hundred and eighty-three acres were laid out for a city. The main street was named Duke of Gloucester street, in honor of Queen Anne's eldest son.

1705—The general assembly met for the first time in the new capital building. Appropriations were made to begin the governor's palace.

1706—Mercer's free school established.

1710—William Levingston built into the first theater in America.

1722—The town of Williamsburg was incorporated as a city.

1726—First parliament printing office south of the Potomac river established by William Parks.

1736—The Virginia Gazette, the first newspaper south of the Potomac, established by William Parks.

1750—The capitol building burned.

The Kitchen Cabinet

VARIOUS GOOD THINGS

If you like the Chinese dishes this will be one to prepare for the guests who enjoy this:

Crab and Egg Omelet.—Let 1 to 4 fresh shrimps or crab in hard cold and cool. Shred the shells of crab or shrimp. Put one cupful of hot pork into hot lard in small saucepan. Stir and brown until onion and pork are a golden brown. Add two tablespoonfuls of peanut oil until tender and brown. Add onion, one cupful of tender sprouts and mushrooms, a tablespoonful of soy sauce. Heat slowly about ten minutes and add the fresh cut ends of shrimp and the vegetable mixture. Fry in a small amount of peanut oil in small bits like a pancake.

Lobster Club Sandwich.—Toast lightly on one side of six slices bacon, butter and keep hot. Allow two slices for each person to be served. Saute the lobster in a little butter, use either fresh or canned. Season well with salt, pepper and a teaspoonful of curried fatty. Fry bacon until crisp. Place slices of bacon on toast and over this a layer of pieces of lobster; cover with mayonnaise, then top with a piece of crisp lettuce or chilled watercress, make another layer of bacon and lobster and on top place a slice of toast. Garnish the sandwiches with sliced tomatoes, cucumber and lemon. Cut into triangles and serve.

Pimiento Cup With Egg and Celery.—Drain two small red peppers from ripe tomato juice in can; pour in 2½ Fill with the following salad: Chop one cupful of celery very fine and mix with two hard cooked eggs chopped. Into this stir one-half cupful of mayonnaise and fill the cups. Rearrange with mayonnaise and small sprigs cut of green pepper. Serve very cold on crisp lettuce with toasted biscuit and cheese.

How Volcanic Islands Act as Safety Valves

Niagara is one of the Tongan, or Friendly Islands, situated midway between Samoa and Fiji in one of the most fertilous geological areas in the world. Extending from the Asian Pacific from Sumatra to North Island, New Zealand, there is a huge fissure in the earth's crust. Volcanic islands, such as Niuafou, perhaps among this gigantic crack, act as vents for the molten mass within the earth. The lava-beds, some of which are now capped on from the ocean's bottom as land forms, help to control and thus keep away such fires as was said about Krakatoa. Niuafou is also quite inaccessible except in larger ships, but for all of the islands mentioned above there are fine harbors for the earth's mighty internal furnace.

The passengers of steamers passing close the island bodies like any other people like yours with vegetation and normal people. Close white houses and thatched native shelters set in grassy lawns on the hillsides. When wind and sea are quiet, landings are made in small dugout canoes which are operated satisfactorily here a week partly sheltered by fingers of lava flow. Such landings are dangerous and exciting, because the boats bob up and down like bucking riders and strike against the steep, jagged cliffs.—National Geographic Society Bulletin.

Wanted to See the Fight

Joseph Van Hoolte tells of a Non Yorker who went to see the same theater play seven nights in succession. "You seem to be stuck on this show," the usher said to him on the seventh night.

"No," said the man, "it this way: You know that part in the second act, where the husband goes out and the lover comes in the fire escape window? Well, some nights the fire escape hand is late in fixing somethin' or come back for it an' fetch that bird an' when he does I want to be there."—Upper's Weekly.

Can't PLAY Can't REST

—child needs Castoria

WHEN a child is fretful and irritable, seems distressed and uncomfortable, can't play, can't sleep, it is a pretty sure sign that something is wrong. Right here is where Castoria can make a child's acquaintance—the very purpose for which it was formulated years ago! A few drops and the condition which caused the trouble is relieved; comfort quickly brings restful sleep.

Nothing can take the place of Castoria for children. It's perfectly harmless, yet always effective. For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old reliable preparation always on hand. Just don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be an everyday aid. Its gentle action will ease and soothe the infant who cannot sleep. In many liberal doses it will effectively help to regulate sluggish bowels in an older child.

All druggists have Castoria. It's genuine if you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature and this certain place.

Cooper replaced Superaw at guard for Charlevoix when the second half opened. After Manistee had made a desperate attack to sink two baskets and a free throw the score 17-5, Charlevoix opened up and with a few fresh men in the game, Cooper made four, and Superaw and Bowman each, the score mounting to 29-5. Manistee then staged a rally and with Bergman, Smith, Crandall, Shannon, McCann, and McKenzie in the game, they made seven points. Wilson 4, Offt and Kirby scored high point men for the winners with 5 apiece. Newton made the only other one. Smith was high for the Whites with 3 points, while Shannon completed the scoring. The teams were very evenly matched, and played most fairly on dubious decisions of officials.

SPORT NOTES HERE AND THERE

By Newman

Well boys, the Reo and White knights of the basketball court did not stand an upset last week at Boyne City as we feared they would, and we are very grateful. We feel that if they are victorious tomorrow at Harbor Springs that there is no reason why they should not have an undefeated season this year. After all that game they have only two more games away from home with Manistee and Bay City. We have an idea that they can beat those two teams on anybody's floor. They will have four home games with Traverse City, Boyne City, Saint Jordan and Harbor Springs. We don't see how any of them can beat Kipke's great team on the home floor, so unless Charlevoix quits the ball through five times Kipke and Rouse are likely twelve apiece, while I suppose make the other one. They can all make forty nine times out of ten when no one is guarding them, therefore they lack mountain in the end that they were going to take up. Hageman was instructor for Thompson during the last few minutes of the game. Left center.

All Odd Fellows telephone fans are urged to be present and participate in the contest scheduled for Monday evening, January 19th, between the A. M. and I. O. O. F. fraternities. Watch the first game of the series will be played at Boyne City. In order that as many as possible can be made prize winners, the date of meeting, those who are interested in engaging in the contest are requested to register their names with Jim Williams, carrier of the I. O. O. F. team.

players, they would both guard him. All that is just a preliminary to what is to follow

Although the rest of the Boyne City players knew that Rouse was closely guarded, they continued to "feed" him the ball. And Rouse probably missed more shots than any other player on the floor. He realized that he had to live up to his reputation as being the team's leading scorer, and he peppered at the basket from all angles Twice when Rouse took the ball away from Charlevoix Rouse shot long ones before Metcalf reached him, and the ball went in. He shot a lot more than two, but the only ones of which we have a record were those which went in. Rouse maintained his reputation as being the "eagle-eye" of his team—but he team lost the game. When he missed a long shot, the ball would be recovered by the Charlevoix guards, and Charlevoix thus had possession of the ball most of the time.

With Novak it was different. He used his head. When he realized that he was so closely guarded, he did not try to make any shots himself, but shot the ball to a team mate under the basket, where Charlevoix would have a fifty-fifty chance of recovering if the try was to go short. The result is that Novak for the first time this year has been of being the scoring accomplished his team continued its series of victories.

Novak led the scoring for Charlevoix with 5 points McCall, Novak and Smith each made two. Vic Smith played his usually good game. Charlevoix's defense Vic McSmith had no luck at all in finding the hoop, but he played his valve to otherways. McCall did a full week's work in taking care of Rouse as well as he did. In fact, every man on the team received enough glory to last a week. The team so far this year has won three games from Class B schools, having defeated Traverse City once and Petoskey twice. They have won two from Class C schools, Gaylord and Boyne City, and have defeated all Class D teams. We expect it will be three times three before the season is over.

The local reserve team lost the preliminary last week to the Boyne City "scrubs" by a fairly large margin. They have probably developed an inferiority complex, instead of playing against the first team too much.

LATIN II.

The Latin II classes have just finished an interesting project. They have been following the development of the Roman houses from its first stages, when it was only a square building to the beautiful home it later became. And the students pay tribute to the Romans who invented and built those wonders. Now the Latin students are making drawings of all the rooms of the Roman house. They are to be kept and, later in the year, the best ones will be put on exhibit.

ADVICE GOOD AND BAD FROM THE AMERICAN PROBLEM CLASS

After the Economics Class had studied poverty, each member was asked to submit a safety slogan or rule for curing poverty. Here are some of those that were submitted.

Work slowly, End wholly?

Look, Listen, and Live.

Work and poverty Never seem to agree.

Saving pennies always pays Then there are the "easy days."

Here lies his body in awful state, He tried to beat the Southbound train.

Money, man, and brains reduce crime.

And do away with the poverty line.

Move with pep, But watch your step.

Poverty decreases, By checking diseases.

Watch your step, others won't.

A dollar saved is a dollar earned A dollar spent is a dollar burned.

"CHARACTER FORMATION"

By Dorothy Staley.

Almost a week ago the students enjoyed a speech given by Mr. Otterbein on "character formation." For and example he used the story of Silas Marner which was written by George Eliot.

Silas Marner was a crooked old man who craved for nothing but gold. He saved all of his money and lived as cheaply as possible. One night as he was going after a pail of water he stumbled over something. When he first touched the object he thought that it was gold, but upon investigating he found it to be a baby. He finally decided to take the child to his home and to adopt it as his own. Because of his having to feed and clothe this baby, Silas Marner's life became entirely devoted to the child. It was the influence of this child which changed Silas Marner, and gradually changed his character. He began to think of the world and of the people about him. He became associated with his neighbors which he hitherto had not done.

Mr. Otterbein as emphasized that boys and girls should form their characters while of high school age. If we know our weak points we can strengthen them by resolving some thing each year and keep them out our resolution. At the end of each year our characters should be better than at the beginning by repaying us for any effort said in correcting them.

"PHYSICS"

The Physics class is now studying sound and music. The class as a whole is highly interested, while some of the musically inclined students have shown special interest. Before a sound can be made, something has to be set into vibration. The difference between a noise and a musical note is that the vibrations of a musical note are regular, while those that make noise are irregular. Mr. North has made the subject more interesting by having appliances to illustrate each topic.

"NEW INTERPRETATIONS IN BASKETBALL"

It has been recently suggested by state officials that no overtime periods will be played in conference games. Overtime playing is too much of a nervous strain on the players. After one, two, or three overtime periods have been played one team finally wins. That term has to play the next day and is handicapped. Some of the suggestions are that if two teams are at a tie when the game is finished, the team making the most field goals, or the team having the least number of fouls, would then win. If they should end with number of the two teams would be required to shoot freethrows, and then the team making the most number would win.

GYM EXERCISES

Gym exercises started Monday for the boys of the high school who are not on the basketball squad. They will be divided into classes and will be managed by Mr. Coleman and Mr. Kipke.

PICTURE STUDY

The fifth graders are making picture booklets of some of the famous artists' picture suitable for the grade. In their books, they put the miniature pictures, the story of the picture and the life of the artist. Last week they studied "The Gleaners." This is the F. T. A. picture which is in the fifth grade room this month for having the greatest number of parents present at the last P. T. A. meeting.

JUNIOR HIGH BASKETBALL

The score was 12 to 2 in favor of Boyne City Junior High. Charlevoix boys were handicapped by the superior height of the opposing team. Speed, deception, team work, and faking are the fundamentals upon which the Charlevoix team will have to depend if victories are to be gained in the future games.

W. C. T. U. MEETING LAST FRIDAY

Mrs. Otterbein was the leader of the W. C. T. U. meeting last Friday and presented in a very interesting manner the topic "What's it all about" referring of course to all the talk and writing and argument over the wet and dry question.

Scientific reasons for abstinence from the use of alcoholic drinks were given and many statements of the wets refuted. Science has proven without a doubt that alcohol is a habit forming drug causing degeneracy in families and nations.

This is the first of a series of educational topics to be presented at each meeting. The local W. C. T. U. union Mrs. Armstrong will give the history of the temperance movement at the February meeting.

Mrs. Simmons, Director of the Citizenship Department, recounted some of the questions which will come before the state legislature this winter. She also listed the officials who will be elected at the spring election, January 26th is the last day for filing nominating petitions for the March primary election.

The following items are from the Union Signal and similar sources.

"The Value of Law Observance" is the title of a booklet which is being distributed by the Dept. of Justice. The wets would call it dry propaganda.

The American Business Men's Prohibition Foundation has been organized for the express purpose of education. They propose to get the facts about prohibition to the people through advertising in periodicals and radio.

The executive board of the N. Y. State Federation of Womans Clubs voted not to admit to membership the Association Opposed to Prohibition Reform.

ODD FELLOWS BEAT MASONS

LEAD OPPONENTS 508 POINTS IN FIRST NIGHT PLAY

Bringing to the taking screen one of the most heart rendering dramas of another love, "Scarlet Pages," the First National and vitaphone production, will open at the Palace Theatre Saturday and Sunday.

There is no sacrifice too great for mother to make for her children, and the way in which a prominent woman lawyer unhesitatingly runs her career for her daughter's sake is vividly depicted in this gripping story.

Elsie Ferguson, famous stage star, makes her talking picture debut as the mother. Marian Nixon is seen as the daughter and Grant Withers in the role of her sweetheart.

John Halliday, Helen Ferguson, DeWitt Jennings, Charlotte Walker and Oliver Mark are cast in prominents roles.

"Scarlet Pages" is adapted to the screen by Harvey Gates from the play by Samuel Shipman and John B. Hymer. Mandel Fulton wrote the dialogue. Ray Enright directed.

MICHIGAN PRESS ASSN.

CONFERENCE SET FOR JANUARY 29-30-31

Members of the Michigan Press Association will meet in East Lansing for a three day conference to be held January 29-30-31. It is expected that three hundred editors and publishers of weekly and semi-weekly newspapers will attend the conference.

The annual banquet is scheduled for Thursday evening, January 29th with members of the State Legislature, Justices of the State Supreme Court and executive State officials guests of the Press association.

Governor Wilbur M. Brucker will be one of the principal speakers on the program as well as Dean G. J. Laing, of the University of Chicago, with some other of note on the speakers list.

MENS COMMUNITY CLUB

GOOD MEETING MONDAY EVENING, JANUARY 19TH.

About twelvejohve attended the Men's Community Club meeting held at the M. E. Church, Monday night, and a good dinner prepared and served by A. C. Holding and his corps of assistants.

The principal entertainment feature of the evening was a showing of moving pictures. Western scenes of the days are long to be forgotten by many, but those of the present day will be enjoyed by the younger generation. Let us have more of these views, for which the Club members are indebted to Dr. F. H. Wilson, who generously furnished the pictures, the same being views taken by him last summer when he toured through the state in his car.

Mrs. Wilkinson.

The next Club meeting is scheduled for Monday evening, February 2nd at the same time and place as was that of Monday last.

POSTMASTER EXAMINATION

APPLICATIONS FILED BEFORE FEBRUARY 3RD

To fill the vancy in the position of postmaster in this city, the United States Civil Service Commission has announced, at the request of the Postmaster-General and in accordance with an order of the President, at open competitive examination.

To be eligible for the examination, an applicant must be a citizen of the United States, must reside within the delivery of this postoffice and must be rated at least two years next preceding the date for receipt of newspaper applicants, must be in good physical condition, and within the prescribed age limits Both men and women are admitted.

Under the terms of the Executive order, the Civil Service Commission will certify to the Postmaster-General the names of the highest three qualified eligibles, if as many as three have been given a rating by the examiners. The Postmaster-General will select one for nomination by the President. Confirmation by the Senate is the final action.

Applicants will not be required to assemble at an examination room for scholastic tests, but will be rated on their education and business training and experience. The Civil Service Commission will make inquiry among representative local business and professional men and women concerning the experience, ability, and character of each applicant, and will assign ratings upon the evidence secured.

Nothing will be permitted to appear in the evidence upon which ratings are assigned which might even suggest the political affiliation of any candidate.

Full information and application blanks may be obtained from the secretary of the local board of civil service examiners at the post office in this city, or from the United States Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C.

Applications must be filed in Washington before the hour of closing business February 3rd. Otherwise they will be rejected without consideration by the Civil Service Commission.

"INSIDE" INFORMATION

Hot cereal, sliced, split, and filled with a mixture of cream cheese, dates, and chopped nuts, is an excellent dish.

Red cabbage keeps its bright natural color if it is cooked in boiling water until just tender, and, after cooking, served with lemon juice or vinegar.

In roasting meat, sear it first in a very hot oven, then reduce the temperature and cook more slowly. Meat cooked in this way shrinks less than when it in roasted from start to finish in a high temperature oven.

From the standpoint of nutrition, the egg is really two foods, rather than one. The white part is almost a pure watery solution of certain proteins of high quality for body-building and maintenance The yolk contains not only fat and protein of fine quality, but has an unusually rich store of the minerals necessary for growth and development, and Vitamin A.

Here's a good tutti-frutti sauce for ice cream or plain mange: Strain the juice from 4 slices of canned pineapple, add sufficient water to make 1 pint, and combine with ¾ cup of sugar and ½ teaspoonful of salt. Cook for about 10 minutes or until the syrup is fairly thick. Break ½ cup of blanched almonds in halves, cut the sliced pineapple into thin pieces, and add to the syrup with 1 cup candied cherries and ½ cup of citron, both cut in small pieces. Boil for a few minutes, chill, and serve with the dessert.—U. S. Department of Agriculture.

ENGAGE IN BUSINESS ON OWN ACCOUNT

James Bracken is the last to engage in business on his own account in Charlevoix. For the past few years he has held a position with local business houses and is well known in this region. He is located in the Madison building where he will carry a line of tobacco, cigars, candy etc. which may be added to later as the new venture develops.

POLAR BEARS LOSES 28-23

BIG RAPIDS TURNED TRICK HERE LAST WEEK

The Polar Bears were forced to accept their second defeat of the season last Thursday in the local gymnasium when they encountered the fast all-star team from Big Rapids and vicinity. The score was even at the end of the first half, but the visitors took a safe lead in the third quarter and then kept the locals' desperate last quarter rally from going far enough to catch up with them. We feel that the Polar Bears had underestimated the Big Rapids team and were trying to take things easy in preparation for the game this evening with Boyne City at Boyne City on the north side of the bay. In our opinion Boyne City is second only to our team Charlevoix.

But, to continue with the Big Rapids game. The visitors had a clever forward, Lord Tonkin, who is a former All-State Forward. He certainly had real class. But he was not the best man on the floor. Big Rapids also had a guard by the name of Kanitz. To him goes the honor of being the star of the game. Beanles playing his own position perfectly, he was a big help to the forwards in scoring. He made 15 of his team's 28 points. There was no one on the local team who could stop him regularly, although Ted Cooper gave a brilliant performance, and at times outplayed the former University of Michigan star. He was the big surprise.

Without him, Big Rapids would not have had a chance. Charlevoix was taken unawares and had no chance to prepare a defense for that man. The other visitors were Klingsley, Avery and Hearse. They were all good players.

Charlevoix used Davenport, Ikens, Brown, Superaw, and Kipke, with Cooper being substituted for Superaw.

The locals got away to a good deal in the first quarter, the score being 7-2 at the first gun. Big Rapids opened up in the second period and made 12 points to Charlevoix's 10, the score being 19-12, and 14-11 at the end of the first half.

In the third round, the visitors ready showed their class, making 10 points, and holding Charlevoix, for the first time this season, without making at least one basket in the quarter.

Charlevoix rallied in the last period, and made 8 points, holding the other team to one free throw, but the final score at the end of the game Charlevoix 23.

Ikens and Brown each made seven points to lead the local scoring. Davenport made 4, Kipke 3, and Cooper 2. Wright Brown the credit for keeping the score as close as he was. Time and again the big boy would tap in a high score, only to see it come to knock the ball out of his hands when he was going to catch it in a pass. Every time they start the Charlevoix attack going again. Brown also got the jump on every tip-off, but it was not much use. All the Charlevoix players played nice games, but they simply were not expecting a formidable opponent, and were not prepared.

Brotherton, of Boyne City, refereed a nice game.

The preliminary game was between the Methodist and Baptist Sunday Schools. The score at the half was 5-5, favor of the Baptists, but the Methodists rallied in the last and tied the score at 8-8. The Methodist made a basket in the over time period, and won the game, 10-8.

The Polar Bears play Boyne City on this evening in the local gym at 8:00 p. m. At 7:15 the Cubs will engage the Boyne cubs in a preliminary. This ought to be two Charlevoix victories. The Polar Bears are pointing for this game.

Next week the locals meet the Clare Merchants on this floor.

Called to Grand Rapids Last Week

P. R. Ross was called to Grand Rapids last Thursday on account of the dangerous condition of his brother-in-law Mr. Arie M. Cook who was in Butterworth hospital for treatment. Mr. Cook died Sunday. His body was taken to his home in Howard City, where he has resided for the past thirty-two years, for interment. Mr. Cook was recognized as one of the prominent, leading citizens to his home region and was held in high regard by the general public. He has been for many years a frequent Charlevoix visitor and leaves many friends here to regret his passing.

CHARLEVOIX 5 TIES HARBOR

FINAL SCORE 8 - 8 IN CLOSE GUARDING CONTEST

Last Friday evening Coach Kipke took his unbeaten and unlost basketball team to Harbor Springs for a game with the lushly quintet from that city. When the game was over the local team was still unbeaten but they had been tied.

It was the case of an irresistible force (Charlevoix) meeting an immovable object (Harbor Springs) and the scrap was one worth travelling a long way to witness. We are forced to concede that Harbor Springs won a moral victory, for the shortest opinion, outside of Harbor Springs, of course, was that Charlevoix would walk away with the game. It was shown that an immovable object is mighty hard to budge. An irresistable force is something likewise hard to contend with, and someone will sometime be able to stop it.

Of course, Harbor Springs had a tremendous advantage in that the game was played on its own floor. In addition to having the sympathetic moans of the crowd with the home team, Harbor Springs' team also knew the floor better than the Charlevoix visitors did. The floor is not as wide as the regulation court, and there was not room enough for Charlevoix's speedy attack to get under way and Harbor's staff team was not forced to work as hard as it would have had to on an ordinary floor.

Charlevoix used the five regulars all through the game, McCall and McCauley at forward; Anes at center; and Smith and Novak at guard. Harbor used Bentley, Lantz, Beach, Mill, and Frasier. Neither team used substitutes. Referee, of Rogers City.

The first quarter Charlevoix started to catch on Novak got loose at last and made a basket and a little later Smith was awarded a free throw which he made. The score was then 2-0.

MAKE TAX REFORM INCLUSIVE

Reform in taxes on farm lands is urged by the Rexford Fruitbelt Farmer in a letter to the governors of all states. It is asserted that the poor farmer, in the matter of taxes, is worse off than two and one-half years ago when it was in 1919, while the value of farm land and the income from farm activities have decreased by millions of dollars.

The public generally will favor any practical program for reduction of taxes on farm lands and every encouragement should be given the farmer. He should not be left out with the farmers' Taxes on all kinds of industries and on individual incomes have been countless instances doubled and trebled since 1914.

Shifting taxes and devising new methods of taxation for business other than farming, will not remedy the excessive taxation evil for farmers or other business.

The Association of State Auditors, Treasurers and Tax Officials met in joint session a session in New York. W. S. Johnson, Treasurer of the state of West Virginia, and President of the Association, made the statement that 40 per cent of public taxes in the United States is due to the overlapping of taxes as between the different governments which are imposed on the same property.

From this it would appear that the reasons be given for this waste in the government is 25 cent more than mandated.

Groaning, for the sake of argument, that Mr. Johnson's estimate may be too high, do they not offer a suggestion as to where to start to reduce taxes for everybody instead of proposing new taxation schemes to lounge part of the burden, with the theory that they will prevent higher taxes on another part of our people?

How is something for public servants and economists to consider in which all will benefit, instead of out of an already overtaxed public.

INTEREST CENTERED ON ACCIDENT PREVENTION

The problem of automobile accident prevention, with its ready parallel faculty, will come in for much legislative consideration during 1931.

Many states have signified their intention of adopting laws requiring rigid examinations of drivers. This is believed by many authorities to be the best single means of leveling the dangerous drivers off public highways.

In a few states compulsory insurance legislation will be considered, but in view of the unsatisfactory experience of Massachusetts, it is very doubtful if it will be passed. Most generally populated is the "safety responsibility law," now in effect in New York, Connecticut and other states. That law provides that a drivers after causing an accident, must provide proof of his financial responsibility before being allowed to again operate a car.

Laws for periodical inspections of cars, for controlling pedestrians walking on the highways, and for banishing amateur and dangerous motor vehicles, have likewise been proposed and will receive due consideration.

In the aggregate, the vast volume of suggestions for improving highway safety point reason for optimism. Every step taken, no matter how small, means that at least a few more are saved, a few of pain prevented. The public is reaching a state of mind that gives encouragement to those who, through economies and thorough study, are now ready to help the situation.

MOUNT VERNON REPRODUCED

At this time churches, clubs and other organizations are being entertained by the central lobbies of one sort and another, interested in promoting the Word Court, with requests that resolutions be passed or letters written urging Congress to immediately ratify the Root protocol and get the United States into the Court.

The origin and methods of such drives are so well understood by senators that they receive little or no influence. When the League of Nations was before the Senate for consideration the capitol was lurked with petitions, letters and telegrams all professing to represent the will of the people. That this "organizing" had been artificially stimulated was apparent. And despite the fact that the three tailors of Tooley Street, the engineers of this "spontaneous" demand claimed to represent public sentiment in the United States, the people hurled the League of Nations at the polls. Through their supposed official spokesmen, the church people of the country were committed to the League of Nations, but when they came to vote their sentiments they proved that they had been misrepresented.

The League of Nations and the League Court have been so generally discussed during the last few years that most senators have a fair familiarity with the real state of public opinion on this issue. They know that between elections the contentabilities make most of the noise, but when elections roll around it is always discovered that the noise they make is no index to their real numbers.

Most of the people believe that Uncle Sam has at this time enough of a job at home without farming forth for more world adventure. He has returned former expeditions of little kind laden with wounds rather than trophies. We do not wish to boss the heart of the world, nor do we wish to break ourselves trying to avoid it.

THE DISCLOSURES IN NEW YORK

One of the main reasons why crime pays, when conducted on a large scale, has been shown by the recent investigation of New York judges.

According to the New Yorker, which sums up the evidence in its issue of December 20, charges of graft or misconduct of one or another have been made against a federal judge, a judge of the General Sessions and four city magistrates. In other words, seven out of the hundred judges in the largest city in the world are believed to have had illegal connections. This record is illustrative of a situation that probably exists in many communities in this country.

And we have well-meaning reformers optimistic enough to believe that anti-gun laws to prevent the law-abiding citizen from owning firearms would help remedy the crime situation. Sure punishment for the guilty instead of restrictive legislation for the innocent would seem to be the better course of procedure.

WISDOM AT A PREMIUM

If America ever had a need for wisdom and understanding on the part of public officials and business men, it needs those qualities now.

The broad and economic problems that rage to a head in the next few years produced a multitude of problems for half-baked and unsound solutions. Many in the higher places are seeking to commit the nation to programs which would result in an enormous increase in taxes, without permanently solving any problems.

The cure for our present-day difficulties lies with industry and the people. Wise and well-considered governmental aid can help. But the public—which will, in the long run, foot the bills from or pay what action is taken now—should do its part in helping to maintain sound conditions and business free from false panaceas proposed by emotional or vote-seeking office holders.

THE TAX GRAB BAG

Fire insurance companies are taxed on their premium income to maintain state insurance departments. As a general rule the assessment in ten times as large as necessary to cover the cost of the department. The surplus is usually dumped into the general state tax fund. Thus, indirectly, property owners are double taxed for state purposes, an unfair proposition in itself.

Someone in California had a bright idea to permit cities to draw on these state insurance taxes to provide a pension fund. The people voted this down 3-1, to one on the ground that it was graft in fact as state funds to pay strictly municipal expenses. Not to be discouraged, the proponents of such legislation are proposing a special experiment for Oregon, except they would have the law apply to all kinds of insurance in addition to fire.

It is unfair to make insurance carry holders maintain pension funds for municipalities. The state would stamp have to raise more taxes to replace the funds lost in this manner.

SOME AMERICAN OBSERVATIONS

By Jay Taylor

The economic stability of the United States and the recovery of its buying power are now recognized in Europe we are told, as the first essentials to the restoration of world prosperity. Only our international ists and their agents refuse to recognize the fact that America in diplomatic as well as in economic matters can lead serve the world by giving first attention to its own welfare.

The State Forester of Maryland gives the information that municipal forests are becoming popular in the United States. The first one was established in 1914 at Fitchburg, Massachusetts. Today there are 84 in the Bay State, 24 in Vermont and in New York 206,000 acres are under municipal control. Some of these forests are selected as watershed protection; others as a shelter from storms and as recreation areas and for other purposes. This idea originated in Europe and has proven there a valuable asset. One village in Germany through the revenues from its town forests pays all its local taxes, give each family in the community a cord of firewood annually and has $15 in cash. Fortunately, this municipal enterprise is getting a good start in America.

Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick tells us that Adam Smith knew what he was talking about when he said that the highest economic progress would come from the free play of individual initiative. Today, however, in the matter of our contributing that portion of the world debt settlements with European powers, it might be asked if the United States is not running into the jackpot to keep the heart and pocketbook of the world from breaking? Has the United States loaned billions to Europe. Canada loaned nothing, except through the purchase of European bonds which presumably our Canadian friends expect to collect. Canada did not fight in the World War, but contributed nothing to the British or allied cause except the lolling of men to fight beside the British and their colonies. Canada, immigration, foreign trade and similar questions, which our statesmen would seem to think the United States has been a bit more generous toward the British exchequer than Canada. Here we see the same complaint of the American failure to "play the game" manifested. While the United States to contribute a few more billions to Europe as a means of world rehabilitation, why should not canada set us a good example by buying up the Canadian bonds held by investors in the other country and other European powers and making the debtors a present of them? Canada should be glad to do it, we doubt if Americans will be much impressed with the idea that Uncle Sam is a foreign pension fund. The people voted this down 3-1, to one on the ground that it was graft in fact as state funds to pay strictly municipal expenses. Not to be discouraged, the proponents of such legislation are proposing a special experiment for Oregon, except they would have the law apply to all kinds of insurance in addition to fire.

MAN HUNTING IN THE JUNGLE

What happened to Colonel Fawcett? The recent departure of an expedition from Rio de Janeiro, Region of Brazil again brings up the question that scientists and explorers have been seeking to answer ever since May, 1925, when the British explorer with his son and a companion vanished in the hot Indian tribe and themselves were lost in the Hunter's shadow.

Truth is stranger than fiction, and the disappearance of the little party recalls the greatest mystery in the history of the age. A Brazilian, Sr. José de Albuquerque, suggests that the Colonel and his comrades are captives of a tribe of white Indians rumored to dwell in the mountains stronghold in Matto Grosso. The members of the expedition expressed a faint hope of coming upon the missing men in their far off "port" of enforced isolation.

But Commander George M. Dyott who, when spring comes, will conduct an expedition by airplane into the Xingu country that may be for this very tribe as well as for new investigations and legends of the life in that Vast Unknown, is of the opinion that Colonel Fawcett and his party are no longer in the land of the living. Says the Commander:

"All hearsay and hope to the contrary, ever since a certain chief tain told me bustly 'White man killed by Indians' and subsequent several articles formed by belonging to the lost explorer, even going so far as to offer to conduct me to the scene of the crime, I have believed Colonel Fawcett to be dead. I have always suspected that had I accepted the chieftain's offer I might have met a sad fate.

"However, once I was captured by savages and given up for lost but was fortunate enough to escape and make my way back to civilization. This actual experience compels me to admit that I am the theme in a hundred of the Colonel's survival, and it is just this one chance that makes me venture deeper into the wilderness. The only possible way definitely to ascertain Colonel Fawcett's fate beyond all possibility of doubt is to fly into the very country where he was reported killed. In 1928 it took me four months to trail Colonel Fawcett to the spot where he vanished. This time I shall be able to make it in four and one-half hours of flying and in perfect security.

"The story of Colonel Fawcett being held a captive by white Indians is of course familiar to me. In 1928, in Rio I was visited by a spiritualist medium who declared that Colonel Fawcett was alive in the hands of an unknown tribe.

IMPROVING COTTON CONDITIONS

The Federal Farm Board has issued an appeal to "each individual farmer, urging him "the subject his acreage to the end that the supply may be produced cotton only on the more fertile land" as a way to reduce his cost of production.

The Secretary of Agriculture makes a definite plea in his annual report for efforts to improve the quality of cotton grown in the United States.

These and other official statemtns show that quality of cotton and economy in production are regarded as of fundamental importance to the agricultural situation in the South. A few active factors in the cotton industry are thoroughly alert to these problems.

SET US AN EXAMPLE

The name of the Sun, Vancouver, British Columbia, is attached to an advertisement printed in some American newspapers, in which canalization of the Syracuse Canal to the United States is advocated. Responsibility for all the troubles in the world is fastened, as is usual with foreign commentarians, on the United States, after refusing to accept any indemnities or territory at the peace conference, in preference to Europe the money promised by the American government from the American people in the form of Liberty Bonds.

There are many Americans who believe that cutting the French debt to the United States in two while collecting in full from Great Britain, was unfair deal, especially since it has developed that France profited and Great Britain lost, financially, by the World War.

However, in the matter of our contributing that portion of the debt settlements with European powers, it might be asked if the United States is not running into the jackpot to keep the heart and pocketbook of the world from breaking? Has the United States loaned billions to Europe. Canada loaned nothing, except through the purchase of European bonds which presumably our Canadian friends expect to collect. Canada did not fight in the World War, but contributed nothing to the British or allied cause except the lolling of men to fight beside the British and their colonies. Education at West Point

"What about West Point," is a question that might well be asked in view of the charges recently made in certain "clears" publications to the effect that education in that institution is a failure and that only a superficial smattering of learning is given the cadets outside of military instruction.

The best issue with these statements is taken by Major O. W. Griswold, who says is an article in the current Harper's that the charges untrue but that the cadets are given a comprehensive and general education which fits them for success in civil as well as military life. In part, Major Griswold says:

"Only the tyranny of intolerance denies the individual the right to express an honest opinion in candid language. Sometimes, however, in such expressions, honest opinion is colored up with statements which are misleading, thus misrepresenting an off proportion the discussion at issue.

"In Article in the New Republic of September 4, 1930, by Margery Bedinger, and one in the New York Telegram of October 10, 1930, by Harry Elmer Barnes on the subject of West Point, are cases in point. Both of these articles contain many facts about West Point in these two articles cannot be allowed to stand unchallenged. Let it be entirely clear that there is no fault found per se with such the opinions of these writers, no one ordained they have a perfect right. The real point at issue is that the articles referred to contain certain statements which are in themselves untrue and misleading.

"Mr. Barnes is commenting upon the course of study at West Point says, in part:

"'Only the slightest smattering is given outside the regular military studies—a trifling amount of instruction by two or three teachers in history, government and English.'

"As a matter of fact the cadets are given a comprehensive and general education of collegiate grade and a sufficient basic military training to enter the army as assistant lieutenant in any branch of the service.

"A hasty examination of the West Point curriculum reveals that there are academic departments in English, Natural and Experimental Philosophy, Mathematics, Chemistry and Electricity, Drawing, Modern Languages, Law, English; and in Economics, Government and Political History. In the latter courses are taught a variety of subjects. The cadet is well instructed in subjects in connection with dams, roads, railways, bridges and water system; and in a host of related subjects. He pursues courses in Mechanics, the properties of matter, wave motion, sound and light, astronomy, aerodynamics, chemistry, electricity, and in all types of editorial mathematics through calculus and least squares. He studies French for two years and Spanish. The last course provides elementary, constitutional, commercial and military law. During his first year in the English course he is drilled particularly in expository writing. The purpose of the second year is to cultivate in the cadets an appreciation of the emotional, aesthetic and intellectual values in literature, and to teach them to talk effectively. The cadets reads and discusses selections from Burns, Byron, Scelley, Keats, Tennyson, Carlyle, Huxley, Browning, Meredith and others. The history course includes the political and international history of Europe and a special study of the United States. The cadets investigates the economic organization of modern society and the part money and credit play in the economic structure of the world. The instructors in these courses is not two or three but is one hundred thirty-eight."

NAVY RECRUITING

According to the Navy Recruiting Station, Detroit, acceptance of Navy recruits, lailed since October 8, 1930 was resumed this month Recruiting stations throughout the United States will recruit approximately half the normal number of men enlistments in January, threequarters the normal number in February and will end recruiting in March. The navy's monthly quota of recruits accepted is about 1,600 men. Recruiting was suspended in October when a revised recruiting plan was placed into effect whereby a reduction in ships in commission modified by appropriations, would enable the Navy to operate ships of the fleet. In resuming recruiting the Navy has made a change in standard requirements for entrance to the service.

NAVY RECRUITING IN MICHIGAN HAS 4,634 APPLICANTS IN 1931

According to a report compiled for the Navy Department by Lieutenant Commander Max Silverman, U. S. Navy, Medical Officer, attached to the Navy Recruiting Station, Detroit, 4,634 men applied for enlistment in the United States Navy in Detroit and the State of Michigan during 1930. Of that number only 1,474 were accepted. There were 3,160 rejected for the following reasons: defective teeth 40%; flat feet 18%; defective vision 12%; poor blindness 3%; various other reasons, such as underweight adenoids, poor tonsils, and other physical and mental disqualifications comprise the other 27%.

JUNGLE'S MEANEST BEAST

Mystery and cussedness combine to make the black leopard the most fascinating of all wild animals, declares Frank Buck, famous wild animal collector. According to Mr. Buck, the black leopard is "the smartest and most vicious of all great cats." Moreover, he is a nocturnal mystery, a new species which is even now in process of evolution.

It is surprising how many preachers there are in action right now who believe that it would be better for us to join the League Court than to get religion.

CHARLEVOIX—A NEW SUMMER RESORT—ITS ATTRACTIONS

The following communication is from our regular Chicago correspondent, Norman, and speaks well of the new resort company:

During the past summer a company of Chicago gentlemen desirous of taking a breathing spell during the hot days of July and August, took a trip up in the "fish line," The United Machine, Petoskey and Charlevoix—at the latter place they staid several days, charmed by its surroundings and enjoyed every pleasant, breezy days, the pure air, the absence of the dust and heat of the city, all combined to make them stay very pleasant.

One of the gentlemen, taking the place well, became a person of land, intending it for a summer residence lot. The three other gentlemen meeting each after, and comparing notes and opinions regarding Charlevoix, agreed to purchase a large tract of land, and set it apart for a summer resort. This had been done and a stock company formed, a charter obtained and enrolled under our state laws as the "Chicago Summer Resort Company." The capital stock has been place at $10,000, in shares of $100 each, subject to call. The land has been paid for and fully secured. As soon as spring opens the place will be improved and made as beautiful as its situation demands.

It is the intention of the company to spare no pains or expense to make this place very attractive to pleasure seekers. We have a fine location, high and dry between two lakes, fronting both of them. This will give good fishing and free bathing grounds. Besides this the road is but a few miles from three of the best trout streams in the State of Michigan. Charlevoix is naturally adapted for a quiet healthy summer resort. The officers of the company consist of the following well known gentlemen:

President—Caleb F. Gates.
Vice President—Silas M. Moore.
Secretary—Harvey Dean.

OBJECT TO THE CHELSEA PLANT

Operation during the year 1930 of the Michigan Utilities Industry, at Chelsea, as a prison industry at Jackson prison, not only cost the taxpayers of Michigan upwards of $100,000 but has added materially to the unemployment situation in the cement industry of the state, according to a letter written by Mr. John L. A. Galster of the Petoskey Portland Cement Company to members of the 1931 legislature in this district.

The cement industry in Michigan, according to Mr. Galster's letter, has felt the business depression more than the industry in any other state. During the years a great portion of the cement sold in Michigan went into Highway construction, and altho the state lost in excess of 12 roads it still used all cement produced at Chelsea; it sold to the State Highway Department more than 500,000 barrels.

In the face of a business depression the cement industry employing free labor, maintained its employment and wage schedules during the last year, to take care of the employes, in some instances thus retaining an actual loss upon each barrel of cement sold. Due to the operations of the state plant, however, the privately owned plants were forced to cease operations early in the fall, and their employees laid off indefinitely.

The figures used in computing the loss on the operations of the state plant, Galster says, were obtained, using the usual depreciation figures of the plant, the same as are used by privately owned plants, but there was nothing charged against operation for sales costs, taxes, or other similar items, such as the privately owned plants must face, nor was there anything charged for the fuel oil and clothing of the 300 or more prisoners employed at the plant, a charge which is made against Jackson prison.

Mr. Galster says in his letter that, "Had the plant operated during 1929, there was a deficit of $85,000 in the operation of the plant, that is figuring at that time oil prices were about as large. He said that the figures show the plant to be operating on a daily loss of more than $350, to the taxpayers, who are paying approximately $1.75 a day for the privilege of working each of the 200 convicts, in addition to the to $1.17 per day it cost the state for their keep.

The letter points out that the private cement plants in Michigan represent an investment of $75,000,000 and that these owners, more than 200 convicts, in addition to the than 10,000 stockholders, with 5,000 employes, ask that the state stop operations of the Chelsea plant, as only an economic injustice, as well as a protection to the industry and its employes.

PUTTING GAME ON THE SPOT

We hold aloft a fragment of "Science conservation," raw and bleeding, loathsome and repulsive, criminals in its waste, cowardly in the sadism of wholesale.

A certain person owns a number of lakes near Stuttgart, Arkansas. Two of these lakes are kept as inviolate sanctuary for wildfowl. The others are heavily baited with grain. Here the baited ducks are murdered. They flocked to the food by the hundreds. They survive as an added attraction, layer on layer, when they fly.

The owner disposes his pot shootings—for they couldn't be sportsmen even advantageous positions and then drives the ducks over them. Thirty men killed 450 mallards in eight minutes! That's how this bird became extinct, that's how cowardly the men were. Sportsmen who saw the slaughter turned away in disgust.

And this is done in the name of "Game Conservation?" The owner does keep two lakes inviolate. What a gesture! And because of this he argues that he is a game conservationist! A benefactor of the waterfowl!

He charges each man $10 for the privilege of murdering fifteen ducks. Its a racket. The bewildered ducks are put on the spot for 66 cents each.

And its all legal in Arkansas. In fact, it is legal in most states. The American Game Association from which this information comes, has estimates just 440,000,000 in the United States. Every year 3,324 collected for the following reasons: defective teeth 40%; flat feet 18%; defective vision 12%; poor blindness 3%; various other reasons, such as underweight adenoids, poor tonsils, and other physical and mental disqualifications comprise the other 27%.

Electric and Gas Co's to Spend Millions

Ann Arbor, Mich., Jan. 12.—Michigan electric power and gas utilities are planning to spend approximately $40,000,000 in new construction during the coming year, according to a compilation of budget estimates just completed by the Michigan Public Utility Information Service.

This $40,000,000 will be well distributed throughout the state, from the southeastern industrial section to far away Keweenaw Peninsula.

The gas companies of the state are planning to spend close to $5,000,000 and the electric power companies have budgets running close to $33,000,000.

The electric utility plans call for increased generating capacity in power houses, construction of transmission lines to reach new territory, the erection of new service offices, extension of office and service buildings, the buildings of farms lines, the establishing and operating of switch yards and sub-stations, and like betterments.

The gas companies are planning improvements in generating and distribution facilities, the construction of new holders, and the building of high pressure lines to take gas to communities or sections which have never hitherto had service. It is expected that between 18 and 23 new gas communities will be supplied with gas before the end of the present year.

During the industrial lull both the gas and electric untilities have gone ahead with their construction programs so as to be in a position to provide ample service when normal conditions are restored. There has been a solid and substantial growth in the use of gas and electricity for purposes closely related to the advancing standards of living of the people of Michigan. This growth has been maintained despite the industrial set-back. Added to it are growing industrial load as various adaptations and applications of gas and electricity to Michigan manufacturing and producing processes are developed. Enlargement of capacities and facilities are necessary to take care of this ever increasing load as well as to meet the demand from established users of gas and electricity who are constantly requiring their customary production activities.

The forty million dollars budget is evidence both of the healthfulness of the present untility business and of the faith of the utility managements that Michigan after the temporary lull will resume its vigorous activity and steady advancement.

Announcement that coal order calculations early spring will show price reduction of from twenty to forty per cent ought to get a good laugh out of the free traders who tried to kid us into the belief that the new tariff law would increase the cost of living.

SHEEP AND LAMBS ON FEED, JANUARY 1, 1931

Michigan farmers were feeding 200,000 sheep and lambs on January 1, 1931, according to a report released today by the Michigan Co-operative Crop Reporting Service. This is 72 per cent of the 279,000 on feed one year ago and represents a small decrease in native and a sharp decrease in western stock. In the face of the feed shortage and the general depression, farmers have been reluctant to buy and the shipments of feeders into the State for the last six months of 1930 were only 45 per cent of those shipped during the corresponding period in 1929. It is also probable that more sheep and lambs were marketed directly from grass feed in the fall than in most years because of the lack of feed. Slaughtering records show 567,000 head marketed from Michigan during the last half of 1930 as compared with 484,000 during the last half of 1929.

Through the reduction in the total number of the feed force each county in the lower peninsula will be limited to one conservation officer. In districts where it is thought necessary, one or more "free lance" officers will be attached to headquarters, but available for call to any part of the district to answer complaints or to assist the local officer.

CATTLE ON FEED, JANUARY 1, 1931

It is estimated that there were twenty per cent less cattle being fed in Michigan farms on January 1 of this year than one year ago. A shortage of corn and hay with less available feed but for the number of western cattle shipped into the State during the last six months to 85 per cent of the number purchased during the corresponding period in the previous year However, 85 per cent of the stock fed is reported within the State and the reduction in demand for feeders is the basic machinery of cattle during the past season as evidenced by the reports of receipts at stockyards.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

RIO DE JANEIRO

TWENTY cities was received at Geneva, the capital of the South American republic of Venezuela, a citizen of a great American. The Government on 11 written in Spanish, reads: Hanoi Chile, 1777-1830, associate of humanity between the countries of America and Liberator Bolivar of your immortal greatness. The United States of America (country to the United States of Venezuela this citizen of the illustrious statesman, speaker of the house of representatives, senator and secretary of state."

The citizen, which was given in return for one of ours, Simon Bolivar, the South American champion of independence, which was received in Caracas just prior to New Year day in 1911, was formally dedicated by James Sloan Gibbons, foreign ambassador in March, head of a distinguished delegation from the United States and the citizen was received by President Juan Vicente Gomez of Venezuela.

This ceremony which honored the man who has justly been called "the First Pan-American" and "the Father of Pan-Americanism," was a significant one due to the history of the continent of the New World. It was a gesture of friendship on the part of the most powerful of these countries to a weaker nation which has reason to feel grateful to its elder sister in the Pan-American family. For to the Venezuelans the statue, erected in the square in their capital to which they have already given the name of Plaza Henry Clay, means more than a re-re memento of a great man. To them Henry Clay was a friend, and a friend in words, but a friend in actions as well and the new monument will be a lasting reminder of one first aid of the international gold will which prompted the presentation of it to their country.

As early as 1816 Henry Clay began his campaign in the house of representatives in support of the colonies of Spain then in revolt. Clay in his capacity as speaker, remaining that the United States must have equity "to take part with the patriots of South America," opposed the American of its tardiest in the War of 1812, and a year later likewise opposed a bill intending to keep the money out of our treasury in United States ports, declaring that such action might be detrimental to the interests of South American states then struggling for freedom.

In 1817 he offered a proposition to authorize a salary for a minister to the provinces of Rio de la Plata. In March, 1818, Clay made the speech which is still cheerfully remembered by the South Americans. Like all of Clay's orations, it was stirring; it was the first plea voiced for recognition of the countries then in the throes of the fight of Spain.

Action in the house of representatives in thunderous and pleaded sympathy for "the 16 millions of people, struggling to burst their chains and be free."

This speech gained for the United States generosity and friendship in particular many friends among the South American countries, who were destined to increase when in 1826 Clay introduced a motion into the house of representatives to instigate diplomatic intercourse with "any of the governments of South America which has established and are maintaining their independence of Spain." The next year, as the result of a resolution he supported, President Monroe sent a special message to congress and a resolution to establish intercourse with the South American nations.

When Clay became secretary of state in 1825, his zeal in promoting friendship between the republics of North and South America became apparent almost immediately. He has been hailed as "The Father of Pan-Americanism" because of the stress which he was to encourage the success of the congress at Panama in 1826, which convened at the call of Simon Bolivar. The United States was not in the first list of countries, but at Clay's suggestion this country later was included. The invitation gave Clay an opportunity to prepare instructions to the United States delegation which is every feature pleasant to accord with the principles which have governed the Pan-American movement of recent years.

Clay sought, he said, "to afford opportunity for free and friendly communication between nations." He proposed the abolition of war against private property and non-combatants upon the ocean. He urged the American delegates against seeking exclusive privileges against Europe. He suggested an interoceanic canal. Unfortunately, congress quibbled about the Panama congress until the timely arrival of the United States delegation was impossible, and the full period of Clay's policies was not evinced until later years.

One of the facts about Clay's influence upon our international policy which is not commonly known to most Americans is in regard to the so-called "Monroe Doctrine." The principles enunciated in that famous document Clay forecast in an address at Lexington, Ky., in July, 1821. He had been speaking of the Holy Alliance of European patriots with brilliance and fervor in congress which was then under way in Europe. It sought, however, public opinion was won over and when finally in 1827 the purchase of Florida was settled Treaties had begun to recognize the new republics. The next year the President in his annual message to congress made the following statement:

"It was, it, therefore to combat, and to the fullest extent, the principles thus avowed by the United States and those powers, to declare that we would consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered and shall not interfere. But with the governments who have declared their independence, and maintained it, and whose independence we have, on great consideration and on just principles, acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them, or controlling in any other manner their destiny, by any European power, in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States."

These 130 words have since become famous as the "Monroe Doctrine," although they might more justly be called the "Clay Doctrine," for had not Henry Clay prepared the way for them and constructed them to the formulation of the doctrine, they might never have been uttered. Clay's last great Pan-American work as secretary of state in 1828, was to organize European influence, particularly that of Russia, to prevail upon Spain to discontinue the war against her former colonies.

The story of this man who was honored by the South American capital is a figure of international importance is one of the most romantic in American history. Although he is mainly regarded as a Kentuckian, he is another example of a gift to the nation by the Old Dominion, for he was born in "the Shadow of Monroe" (hence the popular nickname of "Mill Boy of the Slashes") of Hanover county on April 12, 1777.

Having received but meager schooling young Clay was offered the post of clerk of the Virginia high court of chancery. There he made the most of his opportunity to study law, being admitted to the bar in 1797. At about this time he emigrated to Kentucky. It was not long before he took an interest in current affairs, in the question of slavery in particular. His efforts and speeches stirred him before the public repeatedly.

"Half-cracked," as John Quincy Adams put it, Clay possessed all that ec-quence and rareness of spirit that tends to captivate. He was a dashing figure and part starts final of cards, but his fortunes supposedly suffered not, from this, for shortly after he had married Miss Lucretia Hart Ashland, his famous Kentucky estate. Before he had become a leader of constitutional ruling, apparently unnoticed—he was in the United States senate filling out an unexpired term (before that he had served in the Kentucky legislature.

The real opening of his long political career was in 1811, when unanimous speaker of the house of representatives. His first acquittal officially contrasting with the compromising and pacifying nature of his support in later years, were directed against Great Britain. Firmly supporting trade restrictions and the improvement of American resources. This attitude found ready response and the War of 1812 was the result. Clay's vote did much to fix the popular train which resulted in brief disunity for the United States.

After a time of embarrassing reverses for American soldiers, Gens. Dallas finally entered into negotiations for peace. Clay, with Adams and Albert Gallatin, was sent to Ghent by President Madison to make the best of a sorry situation. England, it appeared, pushed victorious in Europe, had "her arms" among the commissioners demanded a share. But commissioners to give to individuals would have resulted in nothing less than the Louisiana purchase, accompanied by concessions which Jefferson, Madison, Monroe and Jackson had struggled for. Clay finally signed which succeeded things just about as they had been at the beginning of hostilities. Clay was demanded, the sending was postponed about the affairs the time had been longer easy, but no regret.

In the years that followed Clay rose to the heights of a statesman and a leader in a day when there were giants in Washington. Webster, Calhoun in later on made the decision of the nation, although the latter never quite reached for which he wished. Jackson was defeated by the "Corrupt Bargain" of Clay and Adams, but was very prime of post-warfare thought which the supremacy of 1850 between the slave states and the free states was but for his untimely death in 1852 one history of the Civil war period would have been written differently.

Closely connected with the name of Henry Clay in the story of Pan-Americanism is the name of John Poinsett, called "the Liberator" and also "the Genius Washington of South America." Poinsett, a native of South Carolina, was born in Charleston, March 2, 1779. Before he entered the United States army he traveled extensively in Europe and in Caucasus, but on returning to his native state he entered politics and was elected to the state legislature. When the United States sent him to Chile as minister, and from there went south to Buenos Aires, Peru and Mexico, serving in all as minister to the latter country from 1825 to 1829. He returned to the United States and was appointed secretary of war by President Van Buren, serving from 1837 to 1841. He died at his home in Statesburg, S. C., December 12, 1851.

Poinsett's name is closely associated with the history of Mexico, for it was he who introduced the Joel Roberts Poinsett tree, which is now known as the poinsettia, into the United States. He was also the founder of the Mexican National Museum.

Bolivar, the man whose statue in Caracas was unveiled by Venezuela's president, was born in that city on July 24, 1783, of a wealthy and influential family. So had the opportunity as a youth to travel extensively in Europe and to study law in Madrid. On one of his trips he stopped off in the United States, where he saw the operation of republican institutions nearly at its zenith. There and there he resolved to go home and free his country from the Spanish yoke. He first associated himself with a secret organization of patriots in Venezuela, going as their envoy to London in the effort to gain foreign support for the project. But in that Bolivar was frustrated, his British sympathizing an attitude of scorn manifested.

To tell the story of Bolivar would require a full volume and necessitate the liberal use of an atlas to follow all the movements of his busy life. It would also involve the partial recital of a history of one country, now to another. We find him sometimes in triumph, sometimes in defeat, now in exile, now returning to his own land. In 1812 the Spanish recovered Venezuela. Having won the support of the president of New Granada, Bolivar entered the city of Caracas as conqueror, being hailed as liberator and accorded absolute dictatorship in matters military and civil. On the heads of four more victories he won, thus defeating the Spanish.

Eventually he had to resign his dictatorship in 1820 and when he died the next year, he was in poverty and a refugee from the land which he struggled so hard to save. But a greater name in all republics of the world, in Europe as well as in North and South America, thousands gathered to pay homage to the memory of a man of whom it was said: "A patriot, a general as great as the greatest who ever lived, a statesman possessing an extraordinary wisdom and a vision which has been falsified by a century of American history, a loyal friend, a man of generous and liberal nature, a conqueror of the oppressors of his country, a founder of three nations (which later were converted into five, on the dissolution of Colombia), a symbol of freedom, even in Europe, where his name was like a flag to all those who fought oppression; a sincere republican—all this was Simon Bolivar, and he was something more. He was the best representation of his own race."

Many Avenues Open for Happiness in Old Age

An eminent United States surgeon and doctor, discussing efforts being made to extend the span of human life, has stressed what he considered the futility of added years of inactivity, memory of the most outstanding workers about the usual time life would be lost in travel to maintain that the active body is the active mind. "Why not have a hobby, or many?" he questioned. "Then you are not so sad as you if some thing doesn't go right. Then you can always find something absorbing and enjoyable to occupy your mind and perhaps the person of a cultivated taste."

Many boyhood ideals are kept alive by the old man's hobby. Some men find satisfaction in the study of birds, others in flowers, still others in the study of astronomy, geology, or some other science. Many have made valuable contributions to the world in their hobbies. Gen. Horace Porter, Gen. Martin T. McMahon, Gen. Stewart L. Woodford, and Gen. Joseph Wheeler all found time to write books in the midst of their busy lives. Many men have found that public talks on their favorite subjects are interesting and they know that the fact of the matter is a position of the greatest merit.

If people would devote of the time to hobby in advice and experience and engage a busy national national of Dollar Year and Business Men's Association, they would find many opportunities to help others and at the same time enjoy themselves. CATTLE ON FEED, JANUARY 1, 1931

It is estimated that there were on Michigan farms on January 1 of this year than one year ago. A shortage of corn and hay with less available natural has put the number of western cattle shipped into the state during the last six months to 40 per cent of the number purchased during the corresponding period in the previous year. However, 85 to 90 per cent of the stock fed is raised within the State and the reduction in feeding is largely due to a heavier marketing of calves during the past season as evidenced by the reports of receipts at stockyards.

BEAVER ISLAND NEWS

Dan Greene and Everett Cole left this week for Chicago.

Born, to Mr. and Mrs. John Rickger's a son, Saturday, January 17.

Roland J. McCann returned home from Prible, after spending two weeks on the mainland.

John Tully was a business caller in Charlevoix last week, making the trip by aeroplane.

Mrs. Hannah Mooney, who has been quite ill at her home in Pesaine township is improving.

Joe Welsh and Willard Pischner rowed up from Hog Island and are visiting here this week.

Mrs. Albert Smith of Charlevoix, was called here by the illness of her mother Mrs Hannah Mooney.

Mr. Herman Buechner came up from Garden Island by skiff Saturday, making the trip for mail and supplies.

W. J. Gallagher, Jr., and Ed. B. Gallagher, who are spending the winter in Grand Rapids, are here this week on business.

The aeroplane made two special trips Friday having two passengers each trip, Mrs. Albert Smith and W. J. Gallagher the first trip and Ed. B. Gallagher and Roland J. McCann the second trip.

The sympathy of the community is extended to the relatives of Mrs. Lou McCauley wife of Capt. Gen. McCauley, who passed away on the 12th inst at her home in Chicago.

"In as much as she was born and grew to womanhood on the island she lived as if we had lost another pioneer. By her passing Chicago loses a very estimable woman and her children an indulgent and loving mother.

Her exemplary life, her genial manner coupled with her devotion to her faith and her family endeared her to the hearts of all who had the pleasure of her acquaintance. Her spirit of gentility never left her whether she was with little boy or girl the rough teller or some noted dignitary, sensitive to the wants of the needy and a generous contributor to charity she was thus frequently imposed upon by unscrupulous persons.

However, she did not lose faith in mankind, for more than once was she instrumental in bringing some wayward boy or girl back to the path of rectitude.

Her maiden name was Hannah Gallagher, and was a descendant of one of the earliest pioneer families on the island. She was born on Beaver Island August 14, 1853, and therefore she was approaching her seventy-eighth birthday.

She never fully recovered from the shock occasioned by the mysterious disappearance of her oldest son, the late Antone, while acting as chart Engineer on one of our Mackinac Steamers about a few years ago.

The supposition was that he was murdered while on shore, performing his duty as Chief Engineer, between the hours of twelve o'clock midnight and six a. m. as he was never seen after two o'clock.

It was known however, that he had a slight altercation with two of his shipmates, a few days previous to his disappearance at which time he reprimanded them, for insubordination.

An in-estigation was immediately started after the body had arrived at her destination, but no evidence was uncovered, to implicate or show that those sisters had any hand in his death.

Worrying over the untimely death of this son affected her heart, from which she never recovered.

She leaves a husband and three sons and one daughter, to mourn her loss. They are: Dan McAuley of Milwaukee, Pat McCauley of East Orange, New Jersey, Gene McCauley of Chicago, and Mrs. Walter Loyd, of Minneapolis, Minn.

She is also survived by two sisters and three brothers, namely Mrs. Ellen O'Donnell of Escanaba, Captain Dorce Gallagher, of Grand Haven, Mich., Peter Gallagher of Ludington, Mich., and Mrs. Dan Boyle and Captain Dominick II, the latter of St. James, Michigan.

"To the Memory of our late fellow townsman, W. J. Gallagher.

"His fishing days are over, and his nets are laid away,
"We'll miss his familiar figure upon the shores of the bay.
"We hope that he'll find happiness in our "Fathers" home in the sky
"Where he'll not be called upon to set down his nets, and mend and dry.
"May the Master" have compassion on him, a the prayer we now, on high.
"And receive him into His mansion with a myriad of Angel's powering sigh."

"That's too bad about Prof. Linquist, who spent fifty years perfecting himself in ten different languages.

"Why, what happened?"

"He got married and now seldom says a word in eolgewan."

GRILLED OYSTERS

Take 1 pint large oysters. Put a large piece of butter into a hot pan, and when it smokes drop in the oysters a few at a time. When the oysters are browned, remove to a hot dish and pour over them a sauce made of melted butter thickened with flour. Season with Worcestershire sauce, salt, and cayenne, and serve on toast. Garnish with parsley.

Great New Serial
The Fighting
Tenderfoot
By William MacLeod Raine

The Lincoln County cattle war, that grim duel between two great cattle barons which involved half of Arizona, is the background for this sunshooting epic, the return romance of O'Hara, the fighting tenderfoot and the embattled ranch king's daughter. Suspense is by no means lessened by the fact that one of the chief characters is drawn to the life from the notorious outlaw, Billy the Kid.

TAKES OVER BUSINESS BLOCK

OSCAR F. NELSON INVESTS IN PRIEST STUDIO BUILDING

One of the largest transactions in business property located on Bridge street was closed last week when a deal was concluded and Oscar F. Nelson took over the Priest block located at 404 Bridge street, for some years past, in fact since the building was constructed, owned and occupied by George W. Priest as a Studio.

The building is one of the best on the street, fireproof, modern in construction and design, making for a most attractive business house. It covers a ground space of 22x80 feet and consists of four stories in height with the front, a depth of 22 feet, in Bridge street and 80 feet, the length of the building on Mason Street, and makes for a desirable business location.

The first floor, after some minor changes have been made will be occupied by the firm of Nelson & Hess who will transfer their store from the Clark building to the new location as contemplated changes are completed. This will be at an early date. When so opened the business place will be outfitted with a full new line of modern small cases, showcases, counters and other equipment essential to a high class place of business.

Persons recently bought by Oscar Nelson & Hess to pay and increased rental of 50% an increase entered out of all reason by the members of the firm, resulted in their casting about for a new location either for rental or purchase. With the completion of their re-organization Mr. Nelson decided to take over the Priest block and establish the firm in a permanent location.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

A girl, pretty and young, visited a room in Brooklyn. It was in one of those houses where lodgers are permitted to cook their own meals and the girl was particular in the end that the cook-stove stove was in working order.

She paid a dollar's rental for it, which, as is the custom in such cases, went out and bought a small supply of flowers, some bacon and an ham in a glass, plugged the faucets and door cracks, lay down and turned on the gas.

When at last they opened the gas-filled room, the girl was dead. A note explained that she had been overcome with grief because of her father's bankruptcy. It seems if those men in the public eye stopped to write their names we all would get, then wouldn't have time for anything else and life would develop nothing else.

JUST PLAYING POLITICS

Democrats in the Lower are reported busily framing bills of 1932, when they will be in control of the House, so they have had all summer to fix up the national election by setting as a date for the election a day when the Democrats will be in control of the legislatures. FOR FIRST AID SINCE 1846 HANFORD'S Balsam of Myrrh

The First Families of America

Note: Editha L. Watson, author of this article, is a western archeologist who has made excavations and important discoveries in the Southwest under the direction of Dr. Walter Hough, head curator of the department of anthropology, United States National museum. She is well-known as a writer on archeology, anthropology and allied subjects.

By EDITHA L. WATSON

THOUSANDS of tourists pass through the Southwest every year. They admire and flood with the picturesque remains of California on the variety for scenes of their eastern homes, but they are missing many of the country through which they are traveling than its vast spaces, nothing interesting to them. Yet the ruins of prehistoric pueblos were being perused ruined by some crude artists from one of those colonies Indians, but by the time the end of the year has been reached, the history of this part of the Southwest" is discarded as the ugly and useless thing it is.

According to Dr. Edgar L. Hewett, that is the science of the prevalent. Ideas about the southwestern Indian and his ruins "no one should know," he is director of the School of American Research, and an archeologist and writer, ought to come to America. "We would not judge the ancient Hebrews by the ghetto or the Anglo-Saxons by the down-and-outers of the city streets," he says in "A Land Life in the Southwest," published recently by the Bobbs-Merrill company. Many have to other impressions of the Indian and judge the new themselves."

A striking inconsistency of people generally is that while they consider the modern Indian dirty, greasy, and altogether undesirable as have about, they read with avidity every stories about buried "cities" among with accompanying the finding of their enormous antiquity "millions of years old," and believe everything starting about science in diana that appears in print, as if—and this, indeed, is sometimes the case—the scientific facts are an entirely separate item from the personal human handicraft reckon the astounding assertions.

Twenty Hundred this Civilized antiquity are witnessed. "It is necessary to repeat again and again," he says, "that before it [western remains, whether of pueblo ruins, mound-builders, cliff-dwellers, Alaskan Eskimo, Aztec Maya, Incas are just the names of the Indians. Pueblo Indians and domestic sentiments," he adds, "have a deep hold on the dwelling pueblos."

Well, taking it for granted that Doctor Hewett's statement is true, what then? It does seem far-fetched to believe that noble Lamoureux in Pueblo Bonito or Mesa Verde "is the work of" but does it?

I think [illegible] to—I trust now [illegible] happy property if [illegible] Dynamite Gazette.

1. The Great Sanctuary at Chetro Ketl. Under recent this, now being excavated, are the ruins of an ancient amphitheater. (From Hewett's "Ancient Life in the American Southwest," courtesy Bobbs-Merrill company.)

3. Designs on bowls from the Mimbres Valley, New Mexico, in the collections of Editha L. Watson.

4. The Green Corn ceremony at Santo Domingo. From a painting by Awa Tsireh. (From "Ancient Life in the American Southwest.")

5. Mimbres bowls in the collections of Editha L. Watson. The late Dr. J. Walter Fewkes of the Smithsonian institution called this "the most beautiful geometric design ever found."

Among the same five hundred years, in the comparatively small Southwest Mimbres Valley, Doctor Hewett says, "the most glorious and intense ways the most interesting cultural development of the primitive peoples of this land took. This does not refer to striking architecture, for the Mimbres of the prehistoric village appears to be in such extensive ruins" and into mounds of earth with scarce a standing wall, mark the sites of Mimbrenos villages.

The pottery from these ruins, however, is in a class of its own. Not for shape or color, or even for geometrical design (although some of those decorative patterns are indeed as the most artistic and harmonious of Pueblo pottery), but, as Doctor Hewett says, "somewhere along the line of development" of this people the artists of the Mimbres "They took to life forms of the most striking kind and developed the most vital, virile extent that I know of among primitive peoples of the world. In the use of life-motifs, they exhibited a play of fancy that belongs only to modern artists. . . . Those artists dwelt a place with the whole environment of life."

Colorful and decorative birds and animals appear on Mimbres bowls, sometimes joined in curious fantasies of the creatures of the centaurs, and sometimes a human figure or [illegible] is a stalked one. Plump quails, rotund rabbits, and insects alone brilliant hues are indicated by stippled areas are also encountered within an other bowls swallows, cranes and herons and fish decorate the inside bowl, and on others.

Fish, too, clothes rims and [illegible] scene snakes and wasps. Other grasshoppers, dragonflies and water insects are found on these wonderful bowls, while animals are used with one would never associate with the idea of decorative beauty, such as lizards, rabbits and horned toads. It is astonishing how the various forms are used themselves to decorative effects. And other scientific features of the highest interest are also present, as the eye of mankind, are interspersed, perhaps to [illegible] the [illegible] of evil.

From the various carvings found on Mimbres bowls, one may read fascinating chapters from the life of the ancient pueblo. For instance, the absence of any trace one understands is shown, indicating the Pueblo belief in this power phase of existence.

An amusing design shows two men dragging a lizard by its tail, while a third man, from the [illegible] standing at the ropes and the hole its feet pushing against the ground as it tries to [illegible] them, are pictured with a charming, naïve humor. A gambling scene shows one man pointing at a game of chance, artists being used as "dupes." One man appears to be "broke," another has just wagered an arrow and the third is trying to [illegible] his [illegible].

One of the most interesting designs from the point of view of modern beliefs shows a woman bearing on her back a basket, on which sit two men, holding what appear to be arrows in their hands. According to the interpretation given by the late Dr. J. Walter Fewkes, this represents a "spirit-canoe." Since Mexico, who is certainly the twin gods of war, each bearing in his hand a symbol of the sun, died a father.

The Mimbres region is called by Doctor Hewett "an ancient art province," and the strange pictorial designs from the bowls have an artistic and a scenic value which cannot be overestimated. Yet the bowls of the Mimbres valley, like the walls of Chaco canyon, were made by Indians—the same race of Indians who figure so unattractive in the modern eye! We still have yet seen how this is possible. Indeed, it appears even more unbelievable on close comparison. For the history of the next five hundred years, the five hundred years ending today, makes it clear.

White men came into the country; roughneck conquerors who "saved" souls and collected plunder with equal arrogance. "Why do we delay?" impatiently exclaimed the Spaniards as they were halted before an Indian town, and they never delayed again. Across San Juan the Tehuanos became the bitterest Spanish dominion. Zuni, once fabled as the "Seven Cities of Cibola," had an impregnable mountain to hide on, but the seven cities are only one now. "The Pueblo rebellion of 1680, with its drive the conquerors from the Southwest, could keep them on scarcely more than a decade, and when they [illegible] it was in such force that they never again could be [illegible].

Doctor Hewett declares that the decline of the Pueblos began before the advent of the white man. "Enough to say will keep that we unquestionably followed up whatever was at work in the way of destructive forces."

History, grown kind or stern, glosses over much of the story, and some we are at pains to [illegible] up the pieces and make something of them. There is no need to go into painful detail.

The Indian government was made "for the people, for the people, for the people." There were no more wars between the Indians. The old tribal enmities were outlawed, and they fell could be ruled if they failed to [illegible]. There is no record of an Indian army [illegible] the colonies of our race—there is only the record of the people.

"The perfectly ordered community was the aim and end and agency of government and there organization aimed," Doctor Hewett tells us. The Hispanic state "continued in force unrestrained by force, depending upon force for its existence." It was easier methods of. The Indian would could [illegible] it. Miniature golf, vaudeville cartoons and all the other lazy orgies of the village have their [illegible] in remained for the Pueblos an exotic [illegible] impulse." Until recently "no [illegible] were one" Every village was independent of the others. They united sometimes to resist attack, but the "league of nations" idea did not appeal to them. The Pueblos were highly individual. "Let the others keep to themselves. We can mind our own business," seemed to be their attitude.

There are at present twenty-six inhabited pueblos—about one-third of the number known to have existed at the time of the [illegible] conquest. Six are in the Hopi country in northeastern Arizona, the Hopi tribal and Zuni in western New Mexico, completes the roster. Here are the descendants of those ancient folk who [illegible] the Southwest long ago—surely the First Families of America.

Today religion, once addressed as a pagan belief connected with [illegible] and devil-worship, [illegible] though its [illegible] is not [illegible] from the shores of study of some of our greatest thinkers. Death, to us the grim, skeleton, was of little consequence to these red philosophers. The [illegible] when it was no longer animated, was as valueless as a [illegible] bowl, and on [illegible] and food and—as was only this that mattered. Doctor Hewett points out the beauty of this idea, as contrasted to the funerals, tombs and other gloomy [illegible] of our own race.

Nowhere is this gladder than in the dances and songs, whose parts of the ceremonies, and rarely public, have an meaning to the modern Indians. The dances, although performed as religious ceremonies, are of commonplace [illegible] to the white visitors, who attribute it the smoke-dance, the [illegible] and the [illegible] are listened to by parents, and professed to find "self-entire" meanings in various ceremonial [illegible] whereas an Indian would be grossly [illegible] of some of our own dances—which have no thought of religious behind them.

Stimulated by a sincere encouragement, however, the Indians are taking more and more pride in these ceremonies, which as a consequence attract a different class of onlookers from either the curious or drifting passers-by. The Indian dances are beautiful to those who know what they are seeking. There is a perfect sense of rhythm, of color, of grouping—in short, of drama. That it what [illegible] seek—dramatic representations, beautifully [illegible] and perfectly acted.

Indian decorative arts, too, hark back to ancient days. The paintings of two Tewa Pueblo Indians, and others, have a kinship with the figures found in old ruins—the artists follow the footsteps of those long-ago painters in making their pictures today. The modern Indian artists are amongst—self-taught—taught by those who have gone before, as you will, but never either man-taught. That would be to spoil their work entirely.

The making of ornaments to [illegible] pleasure to one of the ancient Pueblo arts, and nearly-[illegible] women work [illegible] among the modern of [illegible] designs. This [illegible] art, as distinctive and revealing, is now [illegible] to life in some of the pueblos and the demand for it is increasing as examples of the art find their way to students of strange and lovely things. Distinctive, once dead in ceremonial [illegible] and wealth, has attracted the attention of the government, and under its encouragement, this [illegible] work is being used in many new ways, which are finding favor with the buying public.

Vincent S. Madison according to present plans, returns to New York City Friday to resume his Student work at Columbia University, after an enforced vacation of several weeks, due to illness which necessitated his missing the major part of the first semester of the year.

We are prepared to do repairing on Sewing Machines and Victrolas making them practically as perfect mechanically as when new, and at moderate prices. This type of work is along our line of service. We call and deliver. Phone No. 1 for No. 1 Service. The Shop with the Yellow Front. Fix-It-Shop, Boyne City.

Stephen McKinnon a long time resident of South Arm township, for some years of ago, expired last Wednesday morning, January 21, at the home of his brother, Patrick McKinnon at East Jordan. He had just returned to his brother's home, after attending the funeral of his mother, Mrs. L. A. McKinnon. Heart failure was assigned as the cause of his death.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter S. Richardson accompanied by the latters father, Mr. H. A. Wadsworth, started for the South via the motor route early this week. They are just running until, with no set schedule, their objective being somewhere where exciting climate, places and there, along the route transpires. They may go as far South as Gulf, but that is a matter to be decided at the time of leaving Charlevoix.

Sorry that we omitted to write anything in this column last week, but we had no inspiration. It takes more than a defeat and a tie to the Petoskey's to inspire us. However, we are glad to report that the Polar Bears won a victory in their last game, and from their sectional in this region, the Boyne City Indians. Only the fact that the high school team was idle kept it from returning to the winning column and the boys will take it out from the Mancelona team tomorrow evening.

We were commencing recently on the fact that the people on the high school team look alike when playing basketball, and sometimes in the heat of scrimmage it is almost impossible to tell them apart. They are "Jarmie" McGee and Ole Smith. Both have light hair, they are the same age, and they are the same size, and they are both good players. Any one who has seen them play basketball, and who has a hypochondriac like myself, can well imagine the state of nervousness and tenseness with her friend, Emily Ladew, to marry Stuart when she passes away. Now it happened that Emily and Irene's brother, Richard Belden, had had a quarrel. Piqued by this, Emily entered into the plan. John Randolph, a great practical joker, characters, appears on the scene. To him Irene entrusts her secret, and the understanding the illusions under which Irene was laboring, seemingly entered into his plan. It were of to work out all too well, but, instead of luring the very commonplace Irene to Randolph's husband, Stuart Randolph, appears in the first act, she blossoms out in the second act as a refinedly beautiful creature. So at the pangs of jealousy are about to attack Irene. The more successful her plan appears, the more doubtful she becomes, and the first thing she knows, of course she is declared that she can't agree to her husband marrying this girl even if she her self wanted to.

To say that the play is a comedy is really a very mild statement. The farcical element so humorous that they become really a farce. As Mr. Eaton would say, pardon me, "Frankly a chemical farces, an 'entertainment' in the most popular sense, individually amusing, universally inoffensive humor, kindly feeling, a sense for style, prevalence it for our not careful attention. It survives because it is a good play."

The members, of course, is to catalog "Her Husband's Wife" as a comedy, and then, observing the uproarious attitude, we must call it a farce, but, when we look even more closely and see the tragedy, the sadness, and the yearning in the life and character of Irene, we are uncertain what to say. Perhaps it is better, as Mr. Eaton says, to be more non-committal, and insist, first and foremost, simply, "Her Husband's Wife" is a good play.

TWO CARS MEET ON BRIDGE ST.

Two cars, one a delivery truck were more or less damaged at the corner of Bridge Street and Belvedere at one Saturday night, when the machine sideswiped from Belvedere avenue, one side valued the delivery truck. The latter was the property of Martin Bloch. No blame attaches to the driver of Mr. Bloch's driver, while the opinion prevails that the driver of the other machine was not responsible for the collision, which places the accident in the unavoidable list.

BEAVER ISLAND NEWS

The airplane made its first landing on the ice in the harbor Monday.

Mrs. Dan F. Boyle was a passenger on the airplane from Charlevoix Tuesday.

Capt. Roland McDonough and W. C. McDonough are building a 25-foot speed boat.

Eleanor Schwartz of Chicago, is here visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Ieft.

Ed. H. Gallagher and W. J. Gallagher, Jr., after spending a week on the Island were passengers on the airplane to Charlevoix Monday.

Father Neubecker spent a few days visiting on the mainland. He enjoyed the trip very much, it being his first ride in an airplane.

Mrs. Alton Smith of Charlevoix, who was called here by the illness of her mother, Mrs. Hannah Mooney, returned home Friday.

The High Islanders and Garden Islanders are shut off from Beaver Island because of too much ice for boats and not enough ice to walk on. The southwest wind opened the passage again Monday.

DRAMATIC CLUB

The Dramatic Club met Tuesday evening. Ester Brady gave an interesting talk on radio drama, and Bob Parker spoke on "talkies" and their future. The members of the club are now studying the elements of the principles of acting and how to create a role.

HIT BREAKFAST

The Charlevoix H-Y has their first breakfast Wednesday morning at 7 o'clock in the Home Economics Department. The menu consisted of: Fruit, eggs, cocoa, etc. Bill Brown was the hero of the morning turning the eggs in an experienced fashion. Everybody enjoyed the breakfast of course, and they all joined in and washed the dishes after the hearty meal. The boys are looking forward to the next one which will be next Wednesday morning.

HOME ECONOMICS

The Home Economics classes have finished their cooking course and are taking up the sewing for the second semester. There have been some additions to the class, the enrollment now being seventeen.

The first problem the girls will undertake is the making of an undergarment, the second a woolen dress and the third a makeover project.

The department is very proud of its new sewing machine and chairs which has improved the laboratory very much.

PERSONALS

It has just been announced much to the surprise of the students of Charlevoix High School that on the night of October 18, 1930, Miss Ruth Critchlow was united in marriage to Mr. Robert Wilson of Petoskey. It has remained a secret until Miss Critchlow discontinued her schooling and went to reside with her husband in Petoskey. Charlevoix High School students extend their best wishes to them.

JOKES

Father: John, I see you are at the foot of the class.

John: Thats the difference, they teach the same thing at both ends.

First Student: What was that I smelled in the assembly?

Second Student: I don't know, maybe it was the dead silence.

COMING "HER HUSBAND'S WIFE"

MONDAY NIGHT, FEBRUARY 2
LYCEUM PROGRAM

Her Husband's Wife," a comedy in three acts by A. E. Thomas, Mrs. Thomas, the author, is a Massachusetts man, a graduate of Brown University. Later he was an instructor in English at Brown's and there he received his master's degree. He took up newspaper work in New York City, and for fifteen years was in the thick of the seething happenings of the great metropolis. To be a newspaper for fifteen years is to see much. To be a reporter for so long and retain a fine sense of humor and serenity is really an accomplishment, but, as Walter Prescott Eaton points out, to write for the hurried press for fifteen years and then emerge with a play, with a fresh and human and beautiful as that found in "Her Husband's Wife," is the greatest achievement of all.

Henry Miller at once accepted this play, and produced it at the Broadway Street Theatre in Philadelphia, with the following cast:

John Bolton	Arthur Lewis
Richard Belden	Orrin Cabiria
Stuart Randolph	Robert Warrick
Irene Randolph	Laura Hope Crews
Emily Ladew	Grace Elliston

Before bringing the play to New York it was necessary, as is usual in other characters, the Baroness von Marsken. Mr. Miller found that that part not satisfactorily. The new version offered in the present tour was retained.

At the Garrick Theatre where "Her Husband's Wife" held forth, Mr. Miller himself played the part of John Belden. It had a fine run at the Garrick and then at the Selwyn Theatre, Chicago.

It is one of the few plays that is standing the test of time. The dramatic critics displayed it, the public, comedy, coupled with a definess of of construction, make it a play for serious consideration.

As a matter of fact Laura Hope Crews, starred more in her great Lauren with this vehicle.

The story is built around Irene Randolph, who is a hypochondriac. She imagines herself possessed of all sorts of maladies, and is always in search of remedies. She was willing to try any sort of a remedy, imagining herself to be ill. Being very much in love with her husband, Stuart Randolph, and sure that her life was wearing to end, she conceived the plan of arranging a marriage with her friend, Emily Ladew, to marry Stuart when she passes away.

Now it happened that Emily and Irene's brother, Richard Belden, had had a quarrel. Piqued by this, Emily entered into the plan. John Randolph, a great practical joker, characters, appears on the scene. To him Irene entrusts her secret, and the understanding the illusions under which Irene was laboring, seemingly entered into her plan. It were of to work out all too well, but, instead of luring the very commonplace Irene to Randolph's husband, Stuart Randolph, appears in the first act, she blossoms out in the second act as a refinedly beautiful creature. So at the pangs of jealousy are about to attack Irene. The more successful her plan appears, the more doubtful she becomes, and the first thing she knows, of course she is declared that she can't agree to her husband marrying this girl even if she her self wanted to.

To say that the play is a comedy is really a very mild statement. The farcical element so humorous that they become really a farce. As Mr. Eaton would say, pardon me, "Frankly a chemical farces, an 'entertainment' in the most popular sense, individually amusing, universally inoffensive humor, kindly feeling, a sense for style, prevalence it for our not careful attention. It survives because it is a good play."

The members, of course, is to catalog "Her Husband's Wife" as a comedy, and then, observing the uproarious attitude, we must call it a farce, but, when we look even more closely and see the tragedy, the sadness, and the yearning in the life and character of Irene, we are uncertain what to say. LOCAL CHURCHES

METHODIST CHURCH
J. E. Lockyer, Pastor

Sunday is always a welcome day to either busy or idle people because it is a different day with a set of new interests. A proper usage of the Lord's Day called Sunday is a "God-send" to all of us. Share it with us on Sunday at 10:30. The sermon will be on "Taking our own advice."

Church school is at 12 noon.

Epworth League meets at 6 p. m. Miss Lila McMillan leads the discussion: "Who are our Great American?"

No evening service.

The Men's Community Club meets Monday at 6:15 for supper. Speakers: Mr. J. Bamm on "Why God loves an Insurance Man" and Mr. Archie Livingston on "The Art of Banking."

The Ladies' Aid convenes for work with Mrs. Booker Tuesday at 2:30.

On Wednesday Mrs. Reinhart is hostess to the Missionary Society on Dixon Ave. at 2:30.

Thursday the Literary Club meets with Mrs. Whittier. Topic: "Can the Church be Saved?" Time 7 p. m.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE SOCIETY

Sunday Service 10:45 a. m. Subject: "Love."

Sunday First Wednesday of month only 7:45 p. m.

Reading Room Tuesday and Friday 3:00 to 5:00 p. m.

The public is cordially invited to attend our services and use our reading room.

"Truth" was the subject of the lesson-sermon in all churches of this denomination throughout the world Sunday.

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Be still and know that I am God" (in the truth, and teach me, for thou art the God of my salvation; on thee do I wait all the day" (Ps 25:5).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passage from Mary Baker Eddy's textbook, Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures, by Mary Baker Eddy: "The angels are exalted thoughts appearing at the door of some sepulchre in which human belief has buried its fondest earthly hopes. With white fingers they point upward to a new life, and to a higher knowledge of life and its joys" (p.299).

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH
Rev. G. Knuth Parker Pastor

Program for the Charlevoix and Ironton Congregational Churches Sunday February 1st:

Charlevoix — Morning Worship 10:45 a. m.

Church School 12:00 m.

Young People's Service 6:00 p. m.

Ironton—Morning Worship 12:30 E. S. T. (fast time)

Church School immediately following the morning service.

The subject for the service at Ironton and Charlevoix is "A Christian and Courage." This will be a topical sermon. Its inspiration is based upon the experience of Paul at Lystra. His courage is manifested in his refusal to be worshiped as a god by enthusiastic followers of Jupiter. And again after being stoned by his friends outside the walls of the city and left as dead, upon regaining consciousness Paul entered the city for the night. The next day Paul with his faithful followers, Barnabas, he goes to Derbe, then to Iconium and Antioch from which cities his enemies had come to stone him, and to Lystra where he was stoned. This is a vital message for today.

In order that we might keep our subjects and important activities of the church constantly before the public a bulletin will be placed in the local Post Office. This privilege has been granted us by the local Post Office authorities and we take this manner of publicly thanking them for their kindness. A list of topics will remain on our campaign bulletin board all summer.

Our growing Church School offers a great opportunity for good to the unattached boy or girl, young man or young woman and adults. Plans are being laid for a unique interesting and helpful Young People's Service.

MENTALLY COMPETENT

SAYS JUDGE RUEGSEGGER IN CASE OF MRS. JOHNSTON

Probate Judge, Erwan A. Ruegsegger, presided at a term of probate court extraordinary last Friday when he heard a petition before the court relative to the mental competency of Mrs. Louise E. Johnston, filed by her husband Robert M. A. Johnston several weeks ago.

The case attracted keen attention, this being evidenced by the large number of Charlevoix residents who were present when the case was called for hearing and who attended the court photostatic as interested observers, listened to the evidence presented and eagerly awaited the decision of Judge Ruegsegger at the conclusion of the action.

Mrs. Johnston is one and for many years has been, a highly respected citizen of Charlevoix, recognized as a woman of ability, refinement and intellectual attainment. She has now many local friends and though her past 70th year, the period of age, with sympathy and during slightly impaired vision, a vigorous, active person and refinements such as is rarely found in a person of her years, especially so when the hardships of a pioneer life, such as hers, are taken under consideration.

In his decision Judge Ruegsegger pronounces Mrs. Johnston as mentally competent to manage her financial business and property affairs according to her own judgement, thereby dismissing the petition filed by the husband, who, by the way, lives at Ann Arbor and it seem in Charlevoix only on occasional occasions.

The decision of Judge Ruegsegger meets with the approval of Charlevoix citizens generally, all of whom are fully conversant with Mrs. Johnston's mental and physical condition her life and environment.

HOME FROM EUROPE
RAY N. FAULKNER
VISITING PARENTS

Ray N. Faulkner for the past year a student at the University of Vienna is visiting his parents, Mr. and Mr. Ray W. Faulkner, other relatives and friends for a month, possibly a little longer.

During his stay abroad Ray visited in Italy, Spain, France, Belgium, Switzerland and England, viewed historic places of world wide fame, enjoyed a pleasant and from a professional viewpoint extremely interesting European tour, which included in the life work that of landscape architecture, has chosen profession, is well on his way. He has for a term of years taken special work in various Universities including Harvard from each of which he is graduated.

With his visit concluded Ray expects to return to Europe, the exact location, where he may locate permanently.

SOUTH SEA STORY
NANCY CARROLL'S FIRST STAR FILM

After twelve pictures, which include some of Paramount's biggest hits, Nancy Carroll, redheaded, dancing, singing screen player, will be seen at the Palace theatre, starting Saturday for 2 days, in her first starring picture, "Dangerous Paradise." It is a gripping story of South Sea love and adventure, from two pens as a novel by Joseph Conrad.

Miss Carroll followed a meteoric stage career with a swift rise to screen prominence. Her picture hits include "Abie's Irish Rose," "The Shopworn Angel," "The Wolf of Wall Street," "Close Harmony," "The Bands of Life" and "Illusion." Her last stage engagement was one only by that of Clara Bow and Charles (Buddy) Rogers. She is beautiful. She can act. She can sing. She can dance. And she has "star" personality.

As a member of an all-girl orchestra Miss Carroll displays a new talent. Dangerous Paradise" further displays the versatility. Menaced by the proprietor of the South Sea hotel, in which orchestra Nancy is employed, flees to a tiny island where Richard Arlen, distinguished in love and emotional appeal all women, lives alone. She is interested in Arlen but his cold aloofness makes her furious. However, a typhoon brings Arlen ashore, the waifs from the hotel follow and a romance develops in real life and Arlen, her love triumphs in a breathtaking climax filled with action and suspense.

In addition to Arlen, who has the leading male role, Warner Oland, the popular portrayer of Dan Robbins, Fu Manchu, Gustav von Seyffertitz, Rosalind McDonald and many others support Miss Carroll. William Wellman, director of the famous "Wings" made the picture. Sea and natural backgrounds, and a really entrancing action romance make this New York World picture exceptional entertainment.

THEIR FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY

MR. AND MRS. LOUIS ALLARD CELEBRATE WITH FRIENDS

Forty relatives and friends gathered at the home Captain and Mrs. Louis Allard, 601 State Street, Wednesday afternoon, enjoyed a six o'clock dinner and were splendidly entertained throughout the evening, all making for a most enjoyable function.

The occasion being for the purpose of celebrating the fortieth wedding anniversary of this commonplace couple, who were united in marriage by Rev. Francis Church, Petoskey, just forty years ago.

They have one son, L. C. Allard an overseas veteran of the World War, who with his wife and daughter, Audrey, were present at the anniversary party.

Hearty good wishes and sincere congratulations, a good will and many more years of wedded life and happiness are cordially extended to this Charlevoix couple.

POLAR BEARS SWAMP CLARE

WIN SLOW GAME BY 23-9 CUBS WIN IN PRELIMINARY

By Harold Newman Jr.

The Charlevoix Polar Bears defeated the Clare Independents in the featured game of the evening last Thursday night by the large margin of 14 points, the final score being 23-9. The Clare win from the Petoskey Baptist Independents by the score of 18-17 in a fast, hard-fought preliminary game.

The preliminary was a much better game than was the main attraction. This was because the two teams in the opener were so much more nearly matched. Starting for the Cubs were Gill and Sharpe at forward, Dedina at center, and Bergman and Newman at guard. Starting Wagner, and Kirby were later substituted. The Petoskey team seemed to be all the luck in the opening quarter, probably because the Cubs were over confident or something, as the score in the first quarter was 4-4. It is the first intermission The Fresh substitutes rallied the Cubs team, and gradually forged ahead, although they were one point behind, 9-8, at the half. The end of the third quarter found the Cubs ahead, 16 to 14, and the final whistle was blown with the Cubs score in the lead, 22 to 17. Kirby and Smith each made 5 points, Gill and Dedina each made 3, and Bergman and Wagner each made 2. The Petoskey team was big and fast but they certainly do not get the practice we are playing against real opposition that the Cubs do.

The Polar Bears' game with Clare was rather slow, not due to any fault in the final team, for the fact that the Clare team stalled too much. When the Polar Bears got the ball they had plenty of action, but when Clare had the ball, the game was slowed up. Clare had a fast team, but they showed no fast basketball. It was more than that they were fast individually, but that none of them knew what to do with the ball after they got it. They did not use their speed to any advantage. Had they done so, they would have made an interesting game. It is not perhaps beaten the local team as they were having a hard night, making quite a few fumbles and other misplays. Clare tried to stall the game, but they were not in a hard thing to do. The only reason that have defeated the Polar Bears was their lack of speed and they used it. Of course it takes more than speed to do the trick, but it is the most important asset and it is impossible to outguess the Polar Bears, as they are all experienced players. No team can make a larger percentage of tries for baskets than this team they have played but has any thing on them when it comes to either size, experience or courage.

The end of the first quarter saw the two teams tied at 8-8. There was no scoring done during that period, but evidently had shot its bolt. Throughout the second half they played listless ball and made a single point. Each team made 4 baskets in the game, Clare making the final score was Charlevoix 23, Clare 9. Bears was the leading scorer with 8 points, while Brown made 6, Superway 4, Kipke 3, and Davenport 2. Coper, Reardon and Flanigan ate the saw service.

The Polar Bears have only a few more games left to play. Last night they left on a two-game trip, playing Clare tonight, and Midland Saturday. Next Thursday they play the Saginaw City, and Manager Todd, who has seen Traverse in action, says that they do not resemble Clare in the least, but that they have the fastest team in the northern part of the state, not even excepting the Polar Bears. He says that if you thought Boyne City, Midland, or Big Rapids had fast teams, that you will change your mind when you see Traverse City play. The Polar Bears will play Manistee on Feb. 20 on the latter's floor. They have a return game with Traverse on Feb. 21, and they are to play a return match with the Boyne City Indians soon after that.

NEW AUXILIARY OFFICERS ELECTED FRIDAY

Members of the Charlevoix Hospital Auxiliary held an annual meeting at the residence of Mrs. A. Livingston Friday, transacting such business as came before annual meetings of the nature, laid tentative plans for raising funds, which, according to present plans, will be by the way of social functions, etc., and election of officers for the ensuing term as follows: President, Mrs. Hoofnagle; vice president, Mrs. McMillan; secretary, Mrs. Henry Partridge, treasurer, Allan Campbell.

CAPTAIN G. C. GEIKEN HONOR GUEST ON SEVENTY-SEVENTH ANNIVERSARY

Captain Geik C. Geiken was guest of honor Wednesday night of last week, at a dinner given by his son Frank P. Geiken at Pelleton.

Captain Geiken prominent Charlevoix citizen of long standing, celebrated his seventy-seventeth birthday anniversary on that day and it was in honor of this event that a large number of guests assembled at the home of his son to help the Captain celebrate and with him many more years of comfortable happy life. That from the present outlook is not hard to visualize as the Captain is in perfect health, active, vigorous and carries his years fully as well as when we first made his acquaintance and that was years and years ago—We add our best wishes to those extended on this happy occasion.

PHEASANT CHASES CAT; RABBIT SPITS IN BULLDOG'S FACE

New York — Come now the pheasant to join the rabbit, who getting a sun at rawan tikker, and the cat-bird to join the weasel, also imbibing of rawn, who strang, led the rig black laws to death-tothe-chickens was a cute field trot.

Whether fermenting corn in the shock had anything to do with the add material of the report is anyth nut.

This pheasant, according to Game Protectors J. H. Nuuman and R. J. Vickers, of the New York Conservation Department, was in a pretty mix in a field on the banks of the Mohawk River near Albany, and saw the rabbit and cat stalking some thing in the grass.

The cat, always ready for the cook pheasant. He charged through the equivalent of swinging doors, coming out of the other side down on the astonished cat. Thomas fighting cat by swing from there, vaulted into high grass and disappeared, according to the game protectors.

Again the tables were turned, for ordinarily the hunting house cat stalks pheasants and other birds, and, according to conservationists throughout the United States, takes a terrific toll of all small wild life—American Game Association News Service.

CRIBBAGE CONTEST

I. O. O. F. WIN BY SMALL MARGIN IN GAME MONDAY NIGHT

The third in the series of cribbage games between I. O. O. F. and F. & A. M. lodges was held in the I. O. O. F. temple Monday night, was captured by the I. O. O. F. players, who, at the conclusion of the play led by fifty-three points.

The opening play consisted of eight games in which thirteen tables were engaged, with four players at each table, who piled up a total of 46549 points. In this the I. O. O. F. players were credited with 23301, F. & A. M. players 23248.

High point single score for the I. O. O. F. & A. M. teams was accredited to Orel Lewis and I. O. O. F. in favor Castle, the first mentioned leading by a single point score Lewis 939, Castle 938.

As a whole the game for the evening were full of interest, well played and closely contested, and made for a pleasant enjoyable evening for the large number of players.

Five more evenings, Monday of each week, will see the completion of the series. In this the I. O. O. F. players have a handsome lead having won two out of the three games played, the first two by heavy majorities and the last by a small percentage only, showing that F. & A. M. players are improving or else they were favored by lady luck. There, too, it may be that I. O. O. F. players were not in their usual form. Monday night, future games will determine which team is guided by the star of luck.

The fourth game of the series is scheduled for Monday night, February 9th at the Masonic temple—Time 7:45.

SHAKESPEARE STUDY CLUB WILL HOLD AN OPEN MEETING

The Shakespeare Study Club will hold an open meeting at the High School assembly room at 7:45 p. m. on Monday the ninth.

The meeting will be in charge of Mr. Charles E. Gale, who will present the subject "Northern Michigan."

As Mr. Gale was for many years a resident of the copper country his talk comes first hand and will be of unusual interest.

The public is invited.

C.H.S. TOSSERS DRUB MANCELONA

LOCALS NOW LEAD CONFERENCE WITH NO DEFEATS

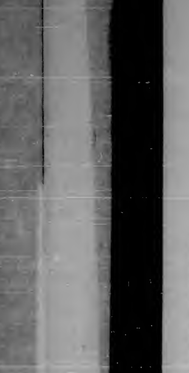
Due to protestations the local high school basketball team had very little trouble in overcoming the Mancelona contest in the game the two teams played Jan. Friday evening on the Mancelona floor.

The final score was Charlevoix 24, Mancelona 8. The local ruggers started the game, with McCall and McKenzie at forwards, Arne at center, and Smith (Vic) and Nowak at guards. After this time has been lined up a guard lead, Coach Kipke sent in a couple of substitutes. Jim Inslin replaced Arne at center and Arvilla took Vic Smith's place at guard. Arne later ventured to center and Jim took McKenzie's forward position. The team worked nicely together all the way, and every man did his part. The scoring was divided between three men, Nowak made 10, McCall 7 and Arne 4, which pointed for quite a game.

The Charlevoix team is now in first place in the race for the championship of the season. Previously Harbor Springs was tied with Y. H. S. for the lead, but Boyne City won a victory over the Springs from the Harbor team last Friday on the Boyne floor, and the former find at 5 and 1 at the end of the fourth quarter, but Boyne City made a comeback in the overtime period with Bergie Orr, their star forward, scoring seven points, and Harbor Springs three to third.

Charlevoix has now lined games and lost none and stood second to the Boyne City five who have a half a victory and half a defeat, the local team has a percentage of 87.5 while City has won three and lost one, for a standing of .750, while Harbor has won two, lost one and lost one, for a rating of .625. According to our last account of individual scoring, the Cagers have played seven games and lost four of them

DESIGNERS ENTHUSE OVER TWIN PRINTS IN DIFFERENT TONES



Informal Dress of Twin Prints.

INCOMING prints which are originating for immediate wear and for the future are very interesting. They tell their own story, as to whether or they are intended for the formal daytime frock and ensemble or for the more informal costume and evening dress.

You know the moment you see the new inch-long tailpatterned of the fine text ex- pert to us were designed for the informal daytime frock, closely clung to the figure of waists line or low are per- fectly over the hips, and big bows are inserted for a finish to the throat, or sometimes effective and evening formals.

Designers are successfully run the new "big pattern" idea in the fabrics to the different types of wear. In the informal daytime frock they use the small or medium size print while the trimming is in the longer sheets of the same print.

These contrasting effects are especially pleasing in the new sheer fabrics for morning and afternoon wear. Designers are also using the large pattern for the long frock and in the longer sheets of the same print for the trimming of the short frock.

THIS IS HOPEFUL

Practically all nationwide lines of trade and business manufacturing indicate that the industry is on the upbound and that good times may be seen peeping around the corner. Let's hope that this is not premature of mistaken judgment.

DON'T STIFLE INDUSTRY WITH TAXES

Issuing a warning against the overtaxation of industry, Nat Dorfman, engineer of the Industrial Relations Department of the National Association of Manufacturers, says that if the taxes levied in 1931 and 1932 the burden of the manufacturing will cost, upon federal, state and local governments.

The public, the workers and the organization of industry, he says, should realize that a solid foundation in industry and state taxes will temporarily relieve unemployment, give the men and women factory jobs and increase the purchasing power of the country generally.

Taxes extract the revenues, he explains, not just a part of individuals' net income but from the entire business structure. Taxes are paid by corporations in the form of higher prices to the consumer, by the withholding of funds from the banks for investment and by the curtailing of production.

Taxes extract the revenues, he explains, not just a part of individuals' net income but from the entire business structure. Taxes are paid by corporations in the form of higher prices to the consumer, by the withholding of funds from the banks for investment and by the curtailing of production.

TREAT ALL ALIKE

For the time being in any program for the organization of the national industry it seems to be more tempting to consider the problem from the point of view of the unemployed. But the fundamental consideration is that the solution of unemployment problems must be found in the organization of industry itself. Any program that treats the unemployed as a special class, or that attempts to solve the problem by creating artificial employment, is doomed to failure.

TEN THOUSAND LIVES

Each year, on the average, ten thousand people are killed in traffic and 265,000 are injured by the automobile. This means that in the United States in one year one out of every 1,200 persons is killed or injured. Each day there are 27 persons killed and 725 injured. Each week there are 189 killed and 5,075 injured. Each month there are 810 killed and 21,750 injured. Each year there are 9,720 killed and 261,000 injured.

These figures are startling. They show further that there is a much greater average in the summer than in the winter. Since July 1, 1930, the month of December alone is responsible for 1,000 deaths, or 33 a day. The record for April, 1931, is 1,000 deaths, or 33 a day. The record for May, 1931, is 1,000 deaths, or 33 a day. The record for June, 1931, is 1,000 deaths, or 33 a day. The record for July, 1931, is 1,000 deaths, or 33 a day. The record for August, 1931, is 1,000 deaths, or 33 a day. The record for September, 1931, is 1,000 deaths, or 33 a day. The record for October, 1931, is 1,000 deaths, or 33 a day. The record for November, 1931, is 1,000 deaths, or 33 a day. The record for December, 1931, is 1,000 deaths, or 33 a day.

ENFORCEMENT OF LAW

Crime and law enforcement are the principal topics of news and comment throughout the United States today. It reverberates this power as at no time since the organization of the Wickersham Commission report. The eleven Wickersham gentlemen who composed it have performed a service which has been perhaps providential, for it reformed the service to the community. The Commission supplemented their report with fresh personal expression. They disagreed on all the important points with the result that there are morsels of satisfaction for persons of every shade of opinion.

Deaths from alcoholism in the United States now reach about 5,000 a year, double the figures of 20 years ago. Ten persons out of each 100,000 population in 31 American cities were murdered in 1929, and six persons have doubled the number of their months since 1904.

It is interesting in this connection to glance across the Atlantic Paris, with a population of 5,700,000, according to the World Almanac, has become a lawlessness and as engineering talent, and governments safe as any great city in the World. It is a regular "safety zone," as compared to Chicago and New York. The Chief of Police of Paris recently stated that holdups and night thefts have expanded nearly 1000 per cent in 1930. If allowance of one-half of this sum is made for the great war and the enormous expenditures it entailed, which is allowed or too large, there remains still 500 per centum of increase to be reckoned with. Meantime, State and Municipal indebtedness grew between 1912 and 1925, from $3,184,426,000 to $11,650,000,000 or nearly 400 per cent. Since the latter date it has increased nearly 33 per cent, and at this time its growth is abnormal, because private use and to be needed for public works which will furnish employment to the idle segments of our population.

Without approving or condemning this program it may be said that the continued growth of our tax bills is reasonably certain, unless a policy of retrenchment should be widely adopted. But of that there is no assurance and visible sign. In any event we may be sure that payment of our bills will be an administrative job for the next decade. Such a condition is wholly incompatible with prosperity and good times. Taxes are the price of civilized society and are justifiable when they give value for money spent. Prosperity is not served by extravagance. They wax fat and will insist on getting it.

"American country people are simply Americans who prefer for various reasons to live in the country," he said. "They are sound and civilized to live part from the banks, gone on account of the city. They prefer to be posted as to what and that they love. It is rumored, however, that Fox & Ross will continue the bank business at the old stand, and that the Buttars will at some future time establish himself in the mercantile business here.

FROM BEAVER ISLANDS

The citizens of Beaver Island had a mad jamboree all night and all the two months. One mail carrier got by two white men and accompanied by a citizen of Big Island, and Cross Village on Monday, January 5, and found ice broken up and tight ice in places, went to frame house and encamped. They were passed at a distance by two dog sleighs and two men on foot, who were bound for the mainland as well as instruction. His understanding and sympathies are as common as those of any group or class in the national population.

Now is the time for all good men to awaken to cross to the aid of Red Cross.

HOW BIG BUSINESS SUCCEEDS

The American Telephone and Telegraph company sometimes a by-product of improvement and extension at its huge plant for 1931, indicates that the company is capable of prodigious achievement. This means much, in fact, to the material men, to officials and employees and investors in the line of the public force.

Our law enforcement experts ought profit by studying the reasons which enable a city like Paris to be as safe as it is essential to commercial and for and safer, while on this side of the Atlantic crime conditions have grown worse.

FARMERS TIRED OF BEING PREACHED AT

That the people of rural America are tired of being preached at, told what to do and think, in the main, is the conclusion of a study of 12,000 letters received by the editors of the Country Home during the past year from readers in every part of the United States.

Summarizing the contents of those letters, the editors say: "The spirit of northern rural America is in a state of ferment. Rural people are tired of being told what to do and how to do it. They want to be left alone to work out their own problems. They want to be treated as intelligent human beings, capable of thinking for themselves. They want to be given credit for knowing what they want and how to get

British Inheritance Laws

The British law of primogeniture is still in force. Under this law all real estate goes to the eldest son except from those subject of the settled, which endures at her death. In the case of money a son may leave his money where he wishes with the exception that he cannot divert from the estate any money proceeding from that source. In the event of a man's dying without will leaving money alone, it would be divided among the children, subject to the above right of the widow.

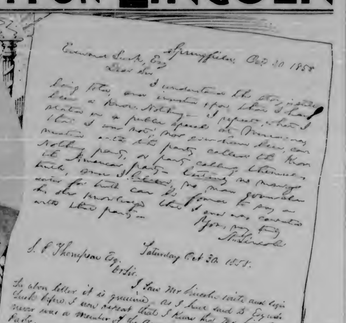
NEW LIGHT ON LINCOLN



By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

CONSIDERING the fact that Lincoln's assistant chief of staff wrote that that General Sherman's a verse humorist if people began quoting mendacious lines of him and considering that Sherman wasn't for criminal statistics, dictionaries and the like, it is not surprising that the first 50 years or more of research by historians of Lincoln's life has resulted in the collection of a body of material of the importance and diversity of that possessing less than a degree of veracity even to the casual reader. Especially gratifying is its wide range of subject-matter embracing most epidemics and family history notes jotted down during the trial of lacerated spiritual identities and even verse. Many of these documents throw flash lights on the personality of the writer. Particularly illuminating are the autobiographies written from the heart of Lincoln's correspondence during the Presidency.

Another noteworthy fact revealed in these new stories about Mr. Lincoln's humor is that Lincoln was always doing something for someone else. Now it is the gratitude of the family remembered for his generosity, now the recipient of the appreciation of those close to us even greater favor or a family medicine time to your grandmother's day.

An interesting reflection of this line is found in the book, "New Letters and Papers of Lincoln," compiled under the auspices of the Lincoln Memorial university of Harrogate, Tenn., by Paul M. Angle, secretary of that organization, and published recently by the Houghton Mifflin company. The book, a thick volume of nearly 400 pages, contains many of the writings of Lincoln which have never before been published as well as many which have appeared in books not now circulating in Lincoln.

In the preface to the book the compiler refers to previous collections of Lincoln papers and says the most important one is compiled by Nicolay and Abraham Lincoln," which was "the first collection of Lincoln letters, speeches and papers which made any claim to completeness." Both Mr. Nicolay and Hay in the writings in 1894 the "Gettysburg Address," a volume of Nicolay and Hay's collection of 12 volumes of Lincoln's writings and Tinsley company in 1906, entitled a Treasury of Lincoln Letters and Abraham Lincoln," published in 1917, and, "Lincoln Letters to Horace" published by Fleet's successors in 1920.

"The present volume is intended as a supplement to those three publications," says Mr. Angle. "This purpose has been lessened by the discovery of a number of letters and papers already in print, but not to be found in the three books just mentioned. It is hoped that the principal value of the present letters and papers available to most of the readers will be found in those hitherto unpublished. . . ."

Some other collections of Lincoln's writings were made, the interest in his life has lessened over decades. Where earlier compilers of Lincoln's writings were confined to the task only those items to which they ascribed some importance, the present collection includes every scrap, no matter how fragmentary it may appear. . . . In view of the tremendous mass which Lincoln's life has created the collection of a body of material of the importance and diversity of that possessing less than a degree of veracity even to the casual reader. Castoria... for CHILDREN'S ailments

ABE you prepared to render fine aid and quick comfort the moment your youngster has an upset of any sort? Could you do the right thing—immediately—though the emergency came without warning—perhaps tonight? Castoria is a mother's standby at such times. Then is nothing like it as an emergency aid, and nothing better for everyday use for a sudden attack of colic, or for the gentle relief of constipation; to allay a feverish spell, or to soothe a fretful baby that can't sleep. This pure vegetable preparation is always ready to ease an ailing youngster. It is just as harmless as the recipe on the wrapper reads. If you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature, it is genuine

Castoria. It is harmless to the smallest infant, doctors will tell you so.

You can tell from the formula on the wrapper how mild it is, and how good for little stomachs. But continue with Castoria until a child is grown.

In proceedings for actions the court, lawyer, keep a sting tooth in his own interest.

SHEER VELVET IDEAL FABRIC FOR LUXURIOUS PAJAMA MODES

ANY again there will be velvet lends the glamorous beauty to the mode. This time the woven fabric is worked in the realm of luxurious pajama fashions.

After dressmakers have exhausted all the possibilities of contrast in using the fabric for the embellishment, the exquisite smoothness and the softness of velvet, there comes the assignment to the tailor to put that thing to an acceptable equivalent, to that extent of use, velvet is an important fabric, as it is lovely.

To prove the practicability of velvet Phillips Thayer, everywhere well known, says, "Yes, no matter in which direction you may travel along fashion's pathway, this spring, you will run a fabric in the velvet family." Let us agree to be attacked or accused by this interjection in mind since looking for velvet is one thing and finding it another, for there is no doubt about the spectacular row which will be placed to the credit of velvet during the coming season.

The interesting thing right now is that they are considered for materials of every description, from diamond cloth to velvet, and similar silks for formal dress to the most utilitarian of cottons that are used for other types of wear, as well as all the other types which are worn for sports, negligee and informal occasions.

Velvets and velveteens are favored for the making of pajamas, designers are also specializing in this field and that being so exceedingly smart as models velvets are now so eagerly considered by the well informed. Velvet is designedly "comfy" to assume about in, and for the same reasons it lends itself admirably to simple trousers.

For leisure pajama costumes, which by the way is a theme of outstanding importance in the realm of sports, velvet is the ideal fabric. The freedom of line in velvet pajamas, the comfort they offer the trousers are matters of much interest and they are to wear and during intimes when never have they doubled skirts. The accompanying jacket or coat is frequently of velvet in gay fur shade, or the blouse is put up of fabric, chiffon or perhaps of handsome metal weave.

TASTY DESSERTS

To the majority a meal is not finished or at all satisfactory unless some form of dessert is served. It can be a fine, small dainty or a rich and filling one, and a handful of nuts. Whatever it may be rounded and more enjoyed when some thought and pains is

Prune Whip—Wash, soak, cook and rub with cold water, two dozen prunes. After soaking ten to twelve hours cook in the water in which they were soaked. Remove the stones and put the pulp through a coarse sieve. To the pulp and one-half cupful of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice, the grated rind of half a lemon and one-third of a teaspoonful of salt. Now fold in the whites of six eggs which have been beaten stiff. Turn the mixture into a buttered baking dish, set in a pan of water and bake until firm in a moderate oven. Serve with a boiled custard or with sweet cream.

Toasted Sponge Cake With Pineapple—One stale sponge cake, sliced, spread with butter and sprinkle with sugar, set into the oven until delicately toasted and glazed. Drain the pineapple slices and to the syrup one half cupful of sugar, one tablespoonful of lemon juice, the grated rind of half a lemon, add the pineapple and heat to the boiling point, cook two minutes. Reduce the heat and keep hot ready to serve. Place a slice of the pineapple on each piece of cake and pour over the syrup. Serve at once.

French Fried Onions—Mix and sift one cupful of flour, one-half teaspoonful of salt, two-thirds of a cupful of water, that until smooth; add two tablespoonfuls of cooking oil and fold in one stiffly beaten egg white. Slice two or more onions crosswise into rings, separate into rings. Soak in cold to cover one hour. Drain and dry, dip in the batter and fry until a light brown. Drain on soft paper.

Australian Ballot Now Universal in America

Australian, ballot is the name given to the system of secret voting. The name arose from the fact that the essential features of the system were first introduced in 1856 in South Australia, one of the states of the Australian Commonwealth, says an article in Pathfinder Magazine. A system of voting modeled after the Australian system was adopted in England in 1872. In the United States this method was first employed in local elections at Louisville, Ky., in 1888, and in the same year Massachusetts adopted secret voting for all state elections, beginning in 1890. The Australian ballot, in one form or other, finally was adopted in every state in the Union and it still is employed except where it has been supplanted by voting machines which retain the essential features of the Australian system.

According to the original Australian system, the names of all candidates appeared on the same ballot, which was compiled, printed and placed at the polls under the direction of public officials and at public expense. In other words, the ballot itself was entirely official. The system had a threefold purpose—to prevent fraud, easy in counting votes, to insure simplicity and to protect the voter from outside influence while casting his vote. These were accomplished by giving each voter a separate ballot and compelling him to go secretly into a booth where he indicated his choice by making a mark opposite the names of the candidates whom he preferred. The ballot then was folded and dropped into a ballot box.

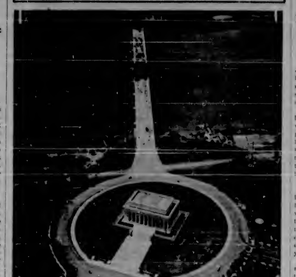
LINCOLN MEMORIAL, FROM THE AIR



Remarkable aerial view of the Lincoln memorial and the new memorial bridge which when completed will span the Potomac from the Lincoln memorial to Arlington.

To Ann Rutledge
(Beloved of Lincoln)

FROM Sand Ridge farm to Concord burial ground,
Along with thee, that fateful August day,
They also took thy lover's soul away—
With thee to lay beneath the somber mound.
He hardly heard the dull, depressing sound
Caused by the impact of the clods of clay
Upon the bier; nor could he cry or pray,
Though all he'd lost to which his life was bound.

HE SAW thee lend the picture (endued his heart)
Alone out there in rain and storm and dark;
Thy cornsilk hair, thy mouth, thy bright blue eyes,
That in his heart in a flame had fanned the love
Which would burn done so. He had much trouble with them.

Lincoln accepted war not to free the slaves, but to save the nation. He freed the slaves by the emancipation proclamation, not to establish liberty but to preserve the Union. He answered the hostile editorials of Horace Greeley by appeal to the good of the commonwealth. It was the strategy of the statesman and not the declaration of the humanitarian. The South had misunderstood him, thinking that he would satisfy the Constitution and destroy the nation by which slavery. Abolitionists in the North tried to force him to extreme measures. Politicians tried to make him compromise. Traitors tried to destroy confidence in him and to persuade the people of the hopelessness of his purpose. Defeat, too, often more than his good, almost urged the abandonment of the struggle—but he persevered.

There was only one consideration which prevented Lincoln's retirement and that was the inviolability of his memory. It was impregnable and could not be assailed by pressure at home or from abroad. It was proof against calumny, misfortune or treason. It remained absolute, wondrous and pure.

Lincoln was a nationalist. His assassination was subordinated to his country's life.—Washington Tribune.

Home of Conspirators National Capital Sight

At 604 H street, N. W., Washington, still stands the house where conspirators in the assassination of President Lincoln met, Mrs. Mary E. Surratt, who presided at boarding house. With three other plotters, she was hanged in the old Washington jail on July, 1865. The house was built long before the Civil war. The lower floor now rents apparently to home brewers. The fourth floor, scene of the shooting of Lincoln, is not so far above the ground as Ingalls of Indiana, or even extreme Illinoisans, be sure of the fact. But it is difficult to understand our ancestors, who are thrown into a pessimism—or what seems to us to be the attitude—by the same circumstances. There are people who seem to be in a stream all the time. To their view Mr. Lincoln did not belong to the party which gave him public office terribly. But he was master of himself, and he always maintained a position of dignity. He could be accused of indifference or carelessness—it was a positive quality in the life of a singularly earnest man one who had determined to take up the war as called to perform, and the nation of which he was the head. Of his greatness there is no danger any question.—Exchange.

Lincoln's Grandchildren

There are two grandchildren of Abraham Lincoln living, both daughters of Robert Todd Lincoln. Both grandchildren of Abraham Lincoln have families but all their children are girls, too. Robert Todd Lincoln had a son, but he died at the age of eight. So, since the death of Robert Todd Lincoln a few years ago there has been no living direct descendant of Abraham Lincoln by the illustrious name of Lincoln.—Upper's Weekly.

Vegetable Crops for Early Sale

Hotbeds Help Produce Truck to Meet Demand of Various Market.

Early maturity of several vegetable crops grown for the early market may be obtained with the use of coldframes or hotbeds, says H. B. Tukey, extension specialist in vegetable gardening at the Ohio State university.

Hotbed and coldframe structures lie pretty much the same, but vary considerably for the workmen, using a good supply of water, and sheltered in a sunny spot, should be selected for the hotbed where they will receive the maximum amount of sunshine in the early seasons. A well drained site is necessary.

Glass Covers Best.

Glass or muslin covers are frequently used on hotbeds and coldframes. In season five during extremely cold weather it may be possible to obtain fairly good production by using two straw mats during the most severe days. Glass covers are the most durable, and if properly cared for will last from 20 to 25 years.

Muslin covers according to Tukey, are quite satisfactory for use during late in the season when the weather has moderated to a very great extent. The muslins should be used and it needs to be tightly stretched to provide an even top of from 8 to 12 inches on all sides.

Source of Heat.

For the satisfactory supply of heat such a good source of heat is the fermenting manure. Fresh horse manure is piled into the hotbeds to a few days before they are started. Fermentation usually starts at once and in a few days the manure will be ready to receive the soil.

If the manure is to be used for any considerable number of hotbeds it may be pieced in piles from 10 to 12 inches deep and from four to five feet wide for convenience. If the manure is piled on the ground it should be moistened as it is piled. If the manure is piled on the floor of a shed or basement it will be found sufficiently moist when new time. The manure should be allowed to heat and ferment for a few days before using.

Whether a hotbed or coldframe is used, the soil should be prepared and given an internal subirrigation such as a wash solution of copper sulphate, as a weak solution of copper sulphate and it may be necessary in some cases to apply it to the soil.

It is always good judgement to call a veterinarian to see the animal in question in this case, as it may be something more serious, Doctor Watson recommends.

Biennial Sweet Clover Fits Well in Rotation

At the present time biennial sweet clover, which has been considered a weed, has been found to be a valuable crop in the rotation with the exception of the matter of breaking fields likely to be infested with it. Because of the satisfying ease at the right period Prolonged ploughing must be avoided as far as possible, and consequently the land is in good condition for seeding.

Inasmuch as the seed is scattered by the harvesters An extra pen of birds with probably possible a surplus of seed. Before the fields are ploughed for the second time in the spring, or after the fall ploughing, one would be safe in estimating an output of four bushels of clean seed per acre from each bird. A hundred breeders should have no difficulty in producing 400 eggs a week. And if the selection of stock has been carried on for several months 75 per cent of the eggs will be suitable for hatching.

It should be borne in mind also that under normal conditions, not more than 50 per cent of the eggs furnished hatch out, while those from these fowls will be at least 60 per cent marketable chicks.

Ground Alfalfa Good for Hatchable Eggs

Users feed alfalfa meal regularly or cod liver oil are both necessary to produce hatchable eggs, according to Canadian eggs, according to recent tests at the ontario experimental station. Direct comparisons of the two feeds were made little benefit unless a grain feed was also used. The alfalfa meal, according to H. G. Bernard, in charge of the poultry investigations, is quite as valuable as cod liver oil. Both of the animals will receive if given good care, and both should be fed regularly and given an internal antiseptic such as a weak solution of copper sulphate, as a weak solution of copper sulphate and it may be necessary in some cases to apply it to the soil.

It is always good judgement to call a veterinarian to see the animal in question in this case, as it may be something more serious, Doctor Watson recommends.

Dry Houses Important in Preventing "Fits"

Warm, dry houses for baby chicks are highly important in preventing "fits" and consequently raised loss, according to Dr. C. F. Hall, poultry specialist at the Ohio college.

Overcrowding in cots or other forms where no houses are provided may also step out and become subject to rickets. Lack of exercise, too, is a contributing factor which predisposes the animals to fits.

Symptoms of the disease are loss of appetite, labored breathing and, at times coughing. The disease may first appear suddenly and some of the chicks may die before they are noticed. The animals will recover if given good care and if they should be found and given an internal antiseptic such as a weak solution of copper sulphate, as a weak solution of copper sulphate and it may be necessary in some cases to apply it to the soil.

It is always good judgement to call a veterinarian to see the animal in question in this case, as it may be something more serious, Doctor Watson recommends.

Better Care Needed

Farm people are doing a better job of raising baby chicks than they are of feeding the laying flock, according to H. W. Whitacre, of the Ohio college. After a survey of 240 farm flocks in 32 counties, he estimates that 50 per cent of the farmers raise their chicks as clean ground, while only 5 per cent provide adequate range for their laying flocks. The remainder raise their chicks on clean ground, but feed their laying flocks poorly.

Test of Value

The balance sheet is the real test of the value of any enterprise, or any section of a business concerned activity. Hay, only to the extent to which returns from feeding the hay to cattle, is any study of egg production it is necessary to take into consideration the varying factors in different areas. There are some parts in which feed crops are specially adapted. Also, business, and there are parts where other crops returns are appreciably higher, and marketing costs less.

Some of the usually high priced lines seven progressively less capable of profit from the hay as compared with feed; it offering less and less to them. Then from the retrogressing stock the great blanket came when he was none needed. He was a humanitarian. He hated slavery. He wanted to improve the common lot, but his inspiration was not found in any of these qualities or in the emotions and sentiments. They were all subordinated to his devotion to the country. He never considered satisfying his altruistic desires at the expense of the nation. There were many Americans who

Selection of Breeding Birds Sometimes Hard

Dirty Egg Loss

A greater loss is caused from dirty eggs during the spring than at any other season of the year. This is partly due to the larger number of eggs laid at that time, but is largely due to muddy hens, dirty litter and lack of cleanliness in the nests.

POULTRY

ONLY CERTIFIED CHICKS FAVORED

Must Be Rigid Supervision of Hatching Eggs.

The purchase of baby chicks generally gets just about as much fun and healthy sleepy chicks from unknown hatcheries results in results in a failure of the poultry project.

"The backbone of the hatchery business lies entirely in the flocks supplying the hatchery with eggs," writing W. Termohlen head of the North Carolina State college poultry department. "There must be a rigid supervision of these supplies to assure that the breeding stock, sanitation and management of the supply flock is of the best. Production, type and environmental views must be in the breed for birds. They must be housed right, fed right, free of disease and should have a profit in the pastures and the hatchers before they are finally delivered at the customer's door.

The professional hatching of any kind of eggs to produce baby chicks for sale is a thing of the past, declares Mr. Termohlen. It is quite evident that to build up a flock of quality and lines of high producing power and vigor, they must be selected and developed by the breeder himself. Haphazard mating the qualities of the individual birds, careful selection of matings to secure a maximum size, and other factors entering into the production of quality chicks.

Especially is it important that the flock be free from the pest-bearing diarrhea disease. Some hatcheries advertise that their chicks are from flocks that have had the test several years and have been free from it for when any time. The purchaser asks for "Pullorum," should know the history and to remind and find if it has been a positive source of danger for a long time, but the hatch, himself free of disease, and there are no considerations for shorter periods.

Where a city hatchery is built, small chicks are raised at very reduced rates, eggs are sent in by farmers and hatched for them satisfactorily.

This method is obtained quite successfully by starting with a "cop" of spring grain or peas as follows: The land should be plowed after winter or spring grain or peas, after which the land should be worked with a good drill with a grass seeder attachment conducting the seed into the chute of the drill, and with the pressure removed from the disks. Packing tends to draw the moisture near the surface and roasting the seed down into the drill disks gets more of the seed down into the moisture than where the seed is broadcast and harrowed in. Early seeding is important when a mixed crop is used.

Honeybee Dependable Pollinizing Operator

Honeybees are always dependable as their members and presence at any time of the season, and in any weather. Bees will have a chance to the flowers, and will attend to them well since the coverage on many is so great as to supply the honeybees with nearly timed sprays.

A number of states have laws prohibiting the keeping of bees, but with exceptions or other protection as horse during fruit bloom. Most of these laws are inactive however, in as much as bees are the best friends and have relegation the necessity of saving the bee by not spraying at that time. Bees are valuable, also, because of fruit growers with supposedly good results have established apiaries at that time, but when the roots are removed they have left the over or went there—that the practice was rather expensive. Also, fair, while the bees are busy gathering the spray being a large acre, as an overbearing honey proof of efficient operation and a loss of other, especially gardens, may occur, could be considered well dressed for either sweet or luscious something we have to deal with it.

Many of the West have dealt with seasonal conditions in the country—people swapped to take care of themselves under all circumstances. The farmer generally have been used to the fact that there is a period of scarcity and they afford for all but four to 20 to 25 years.

Mouth covers according to Tuesday, are quite satisfactory for use during late in the season when the weather has moderated to a very great extent. The muslins should be used and it needs to be tightly stretched to provide an even top of from 8 to 12 inches on all sides.

Source of Heat.

For the satisfactory supply of heat such a good source of heat is the fermenting manure. Fresh horse manure is piled into the hotbeds to a few days before they are started. Fermentation usually starts at once and in a few days the manure will be ready to receive the soil.

The manure should be allowed to heat and ferment for a few days before using.

Whether a hotbed or coldframe is used, the soil should be prepared and given an internal subirrigation such as a weak solution of copper sulphate, as a weak solution of copper sulphate and it may be necessary in some cases to apply it to the soil.

Mouth covers according to Tuesday, are quite satisfactory for use during late in the season when the weather has moderated to a very great extent. The muslins should be used and it needs to be tightly stretched to provide an even top of from 8 to 12 inches on all sides.

Source of Heat.

For the satisfactory supply of heat such a good source of heat is the fermenting manure. Fresh horse manure is piled into the hotbeds to a few days before they are started. Fermentation usually starts at once and in a few days the manure will be ready to receive the soil.

If the manure is to be used for any considerable number of hotbeds it may be pieced in piles from 10 to 12 inches deep and from four to five feet wide for convenience. If the manure is piled on the ground it should be moistened as it is piled. If the manure is piled on the floor of a shed or basement it will be found sufficiently moist when new time. The manure should be allowed to heat and ferment for a few days before using.

Whether a hotbed or coldframe is used, the soil should be prepared and given an internal subirrigation such as a weak solution of copper sulphate, as a weak solution of copper sulphate and it may be necessary in some cases to apply it to the soil.

It is always good judgement to call a veterinarian to see the animal in question in this case, as it may be something more serious, Doctor Watson recommends.

Biennial Sweet Clover Fits Well in Rotation

At the present time biennial sweet clover, which has been considered a weed, has been found to be a valuable crop in the rotation with the exception of the matter of breaking fields likely to be infested with it. Because of the satisfying ease at the right period Prolonged ploughing must be avoided as far as possible, and consequently the land is in good condition for seeding.

Inasmuch as the seed is scattered by the harvesters An extra pen of birds with probably possible a surplus of seed. Before the fields are ploughed for the second time in the spring, or after the fall ploughing, one would be safe in estimating an output of four bushels of clean seed per acre from each bird. A hundred breeders should have no difficulty in producing 400 eggs a week. And if the selection of stock has been carried on for several months 75 per cent of the eggs will be suitable for hatching.

It should be borne in mind also that under normal conditions, not more than 50 per cent of the eggs furnished hatch out, while those from these fowls will be at least 60 per cent marketable chicks.

Ground Alfalfa Good for Hatchable Eggs

Users feed alfalfa meal regularly or cod liver oil are both necessary to produce hatchable eggs, according to recent tests at the ontario experimental station. Direct comparisons of the two feeds were made little benefit unless a grain feed was also used. The alfalfa meal, according to H. G. Bernard, in charge of the poultry investigations, is quite as valuable as cod liver oil. Both of the animals will receive if given good care, and both should be fed regularly and given an internal antiseptic such as a weak solution of copper sulphate, as a weak solution of copper sulphate and it may be necessary in some cases to apply it to the soil.

It is always good judgement to call a veterinarian to see the animal in question in this case, as it may be something more serious, Doctor Watson recommends.

Better Care Needed

Farm people are doing a better job of raising baby chicks than they are of feeding the laying flock, according to H. W. Whitacre, of the Ohio college. After a survey of 240 farm flocks in 32 counties, he estimates that 50 per cent of the farmers raise their chicks as clean ground, while only 5 per cent provide adequate range for their laying flocks. The remainder raise their chicks on clean ground, but feed their laying flocks poorly. They were interviewed, ignoring for years.

heavy one, startled by surprise. "You by crime?"

The other high and clear on a note of excited resentment: "Who did you expect? Who were you trying to kill?"

"Why in Mexico do you find outlaws in these times?" The rough voice behind forth apology and exasperation.

"Suppose you mind your own best now, Slopy Sanderson,"—came a soft, sharp answer. "What I want to know is why you shot at me?"

O'Hara, edging forward, could see them now from the cover of a chute. They seem in a draw. Dan, a tight slender figure, stood against a bank, revolver in hand. The other man, the bulking man, carried a rifle.

The eavesdropper had a swift pas-

"Our ways part here," she said. "Take that trail to the left. It's about five miles to town. When you come to a crack go right through it. That's Squaw Crossing. You can't miss the road."

He hesitated, trying to find words to thank her for her kindness. He knew the color was driving into his face, the effect of shyness. A question from "Easy Shorty" came to his mind, and he blurted it out.

"How many is keeping my wooden fur through my mouth he dumb my head? Shut them up."

She flashed a quick look at him, gave a short laugh, and took the bit free.

Why had she made so much of warning Mr. Sanderson staying at Gaskell? What was this mystery at which she hinted, one which made it unsafe for him, an inoffensive stranger, to grace the his predicaments in the town? No doubt he would find out soon enough.

A steep trail dropped like a crooked line down the mountain side to a village which nestled at its foot. As he descended he could see that Cuchillo had once boomed a town. Now it was down and hollows, one or three winding roads started tentatively toward the hills and ended abruptly in a dingy section.

O'Hara drew up in front of the Union house and tied his sorrel to a hitching post. Both saddlehorses were the sign the young man mounted the porch steps and walked into the adobe hotel.

Three or four men were seated in the office, chairs comfortably tilted back, one of them was talking. He took in the group at a glance. There was not room in the office for another person, so he remained in the doorway. Nobody paid any attention to him. The man who was talking was a drummer, a fat, florid, very much at ease person.

"Yes, sir, I'm telling you the truth. I'm not given to exaggeration. I'm a plain, unvarnished liar. Why, I remember one time—"

"Where is Sanderson?" O'Hara asked.

"Who's that?" the drummer broke off to say.

"That's what I've come to ask him," O'Hara answered, his voice unnaturally low. Angry eyes and voice were no longer gentle. He was fighting with a certain physical inflexibility. Yet he did not raise his voice or change his attitude. He possessed and mastered himself. "Where is Sanderson?" he repeated.

"What do you mean, whose man am I?"

He did not answer that. Her reply was wholly unexpected. He had come to Cuchillo to look back to Aurora to receive.

His eyes flashed inward, and something more than that. "Why, if the girl was married—"

"It's not your kind of a security," she went on.

What kind of a security is it, where men shoot at strangers because they may be her admirers?

She flushed. "It's a good enough security. He's an honest man. Besides, Sanderson is a two-down killer. You can't judge folks by this."

"I'll not judge him. I'll hear you say exactly what he did."

"Why, he killed Bill Stoneman, and he didn't go for to shoot at you—if I did. It was a case of self-defense. I've been apologized. Didn't do anything more, can I?" he wheedled quickly.

O'Hara slipped quietly forward and stepped down into the arroyo. The young woman saw him first. She started at him, eyes wide with surprise. Her expression warned the boy. Sanderson's apparent quietness he whirled, the rifle jumping to his hip.

"Who are you?" he demanded.

The answer came promptly and exactly from the astonished pan shot at, Mr. Sanderson."

The big man glared at him. Slop Sanderson was this common combination, a slow thinker and a hot shooter. He had a one-track mind and had no room in it for two ideas. He understood vengeance, but not the motive that had brought his victim here. As for the young woman, she could know his history and to remind and find if it has been a positive source of danger for a long time, but the hatch, himself free of disease, and there are no considerations for shorter periods.

"Sure now, miss, while she little bullet."

She felt the blood ebb from her heart as she stared at him. Somehow, in the back of her mind, she had not been afraid when she thought Sanderson was the man. Now that she knew the man was different. Her fear was for him.

"Yes, miss. I can see it's better," he agreed. "But I was expecting to find Sanderson in this district."

"Stayed where from?"

"Cold Arrow."

"For Cuchillo?"

"Yes, miss."

She was still puzzled to place him. Though in the mountains Cuchillo was a town, it was a cattle country. There were talking cows, worked there, lived generally quiet people. He introduced information unduly. "My name is Harriet O'Hara. I am a lawyer."

"A lawyer" oh, you're going to Cuchillo as one of Judge Warner's party."

"I am going to live there."

She drew up her horse and looked at him in surprise. "You there! What are you going to do?"

"Practice law."

"In Cuchillo." A recollection of what Dan Randall had said to her.

"Don't you think I'd make a good lawyer?" he asked, too shy to let her comment even unobserved.

"I don't know. But why Cuchillo? Who wants a lawyer there?"

"Prosperous town, isn't it?"

"Yes."

"Then there must be business there—some kind of a law practice."

Abruptly she asked: "Who do you know there? Do some for you? Whose man are you?"

It was the last query that snagged his attention.

"What do you mean, whose man am I?"

She did not answer that. Her reply was wholly unexpected. He had come to Cuchillo to look back to Aurora to receive.

WHEN PENROSE SAW RED

Washington has shown keen interest in the flood of gaudy audio dishes which are coming to light with the publication of Walter Damrosch's memoirs of the late Senator Boies Penrose.

A servant of Boss Penrose of all the magnificence at his prone in presented on the carvels, Sutsinhoof, a Philadelphia Sunday magazine, one of the most characteristic perverts of the state to Washington knew him or found him.

In the news following Penrose's election to the United States Senate she noted that Pennsylvania's respected, whose pomp was "a royal setting, all studded the with and the successful were at pains to congratulate the State on the legislature's choice of Penrose as senator. It is ascribe to Penrose an array of virtues which would have made a Roman Senate for holiness. Of the ultimate the dithalamic repose predicted that Mr. Penrose would perform as President of United States.

Only one person took offense at Mr. Penrose's election. Pinchot was excessively annoyed, and from Milford, Pa., where he settled on retiring reported exiled, Penrose to go.

"What do you mean by making war on Pinchot?" he asked. "I have been talking to your editor, and he agrees with me that you're a fool. Do you? If he don't say it nonsense you've been writing!" The disinfranchised journalist was hanged by mob.

"I'm not a statesman," Penrose wrote on. "I'm just a Republican a regular Republican. That's all I want to be, and that's all I'm going to be."

CLEAN HANDS ACROSS THE SEA

Striking recognition of the cooperative campaign to spread the good gait of friendship, which the leading citizens of Detroit have been conducting for the past several years through their national trade association, now comes from the other side of the globe. The Japanese Ambassador to the United States, Admiral Hanihara, has written to the Detroit Bureau of Foreign Trade of the American Trade Association, that our memorial trees which may be planted during the Washington Bicentennial will flower pleasures of the Japanese people.

The Japanese Government's choice of Senator Teller to organize its new health education program is a step beyond not only to the high stated of trip to conferences and books, that proved in the system but also to American popularity and American confidence. APPROPRIATION BY CONGRESS

An appropriation of money for an unusual purpose may be and generally is morally justified by the emergency which prompts it, even though it be without legal sanction. There was a time when the lack of power was suspended whatever the appeal, and that time was satisfied by private benefactions. But that time seems to have passed and will soon be forgotten. Since the barrier was successfully challenged and a precedent established for distributing public funds in violation of law, appeals for them increased in geometrical progression. Long ago Congressional bills for private relief swelled to prodigious proportions, and for a quarter of a century they have with every Congress outnumbered all other bills and resolutions combined. They cover every conceivable purpose and a larger and larger proportion of them are enacted by non-revenue Congresses. If all of them introduced in this one were allowed, it would confront a deficiency so appalling that recognition would shock the lips of every citizen. But those rejected are generally quite as meritorious as those which pass. And men are industrious and its women charitable have become so abundant that sense of them cluster behind and around every retiring bill as they across, whatever its nature.

An amendment to an appropriation bill offering the modest sum of $75,000 to feed and clothe needy Americans of several sovereign States, because about a clash between the two of France may be put in order, a time, a come-back on the transfigured face of America with the aid of the prisoners' dissension.

An experiment in Southern Wisconsin seems to be prophetic of original Thanksgiving emblem may again strut in large numbers as the substitute for the common bird.

Against the advice of many authorities, who declared that the wild turkey could never reappear in the Middle West because of decreasing woodland areas, 40 of the birds were released a year ago near Baraboo, in Wis. They have thrived so well that the Columbia County Game Protective Association recently released 60 more birds in adjacent territory. Art Swanson, editor of the Outdoor column in the Chicago American, has informed the American Game Association.

"There are still many reasonable wild areas remaining and if it is possible to restrain the game hog Wisconsin may again enjoy the rare sport of hunting the wild "turk," he declared.

Seth Gordon, president of the American Game Association, said of the movement, "The Wild turkey formerly ranged every wooded state, so it is logical to believe this king of the game birds can be brought back by recruiting a favorable environment through methods of protection and supervision which the science of conservation is now learning."

Thus it appears that science and civilization, after pushing the stately gobbler almost into oblivion may now be the forces to bring him back upon a greatly changed scene.

DRUGGED BULLETS TO CAPTURE DEER FOR RESTOCKING

Drugged bullets, producing sleep instead of death, may solve the problem of how to capture deer in overcrowded sections of the country for shipment to other sections and states where deer are scarce.

Major Barrett Harris, African big game hunter and inventor of the drugged or hypodermic bullet, has offered his services to Governor Green, Michigan, waiting for the first heavy snows to drive the deer into their winter quarters, so that he can demonstrate the economic position of the nation. The custom of the French people to work and save not enabled them to withstand the fleet-ness of the German attack. So in France is modern in its wants, its men are industrious and its women provide have business as abundant as surprisingly and lasts a long time."

The people themselves are largely the great bulwark of strength making for national prosperity, and the case of France may be put in other direction. Love a seed, the more it is shaken the better it shines. Like a bonding herb, the more it is pressed the sweeter is the fragrance. NEW MAP TO ISSUE

Lansing—A map of Michigan, combining the maps formerly issued by the State Highway Department and the Parks and Forests of the Conservation Department is now being prepared.

The new map is being prepared by the Highway Department and the Parks and Land Economic Survey Division of the Conservation Department.

For several years the Highway Department has been issuing a highway map of Michigan and including some features of conservation problem. During the same period the Parks, forests and game refuges, and showing the main state highways.

In the interest of economy the two Departments this year are uniting in issuing a combined map which it is believed will serve a more valuable and practical function.

The new map will be ready for general distribution next spring before the opening of the tourist season.

WILD TURKEY CAN COME BACK, SAYS GAME ASSN. HEAD

New York—Can the wild turkey, so numerous in the time of the pioneers and now rare or extinct in many states, stage a come-back on the transfigured face of America with the aid of the prisoners' dissension.

An experiment in Southern Wisconsin seems to be prophetic of original Thanksgiving emblem may again strut in large numbers as the substitute for the common bird.

MEMORIAL TREES BY THE MILLION

Throughout the United States during the year trees will be planted in countless numbers that ever before have been planted in a single year, in accordance with the wishes of George Washington himself one of the foresighted, highly skilled workmen will support themselves and their families through this work.

The public utilities of the nation will pay $490,000,000 in taxes—fifty county, state and national. Two hundred million dollars more will be paid in taxes upon interest from privately securities. Millions more will come through inheritance taxes, taxes on stock sales, profits on the sale of properties and securities, etc.

Facts like these are vital to taxpayers and the consuming public to which an adequate supply of low-priced power is essential. They should be a warning against proposals which discourage private enterprise and increase the volume of taxe-exempt government-owned business experiments.

Lansing—Rolling game fish is a serious offense in the eyes of at least two southern Michigan Justice of the Peace, Edward Imse, Quincy, was sent to jail for 60 days when he was convicted of the offense.

GOOD EVIDENCE

Lansing—It was "cooked up" evidence but it passed effective in court, because it sent George Wilson, Cass Lake, Emmet County, to the jail for 20 days.

The "cooked up" evidence was a choice piece of partly roasted venison.

Conservation officers obtained evidence that Wilson had killed a deer out of season. With a search warrant they went to Wilson's home. It was about meal time and as the door was opened for them the aroma of roasting meat assailed them. In the oven of the kitchen stove they found the evidence, spiced, browned and tempting.

DEPRESSIONS VISITS ALL NATIONS

The latest review of the European economic condition made by the United States Department of Commerce indicates that economic depression did not spare France and the end of 1930 the United States commercial attaches say that during the first half of 1930 France was not unaffected by the general economic depression but experienced a greater industrial activity than in 1929. These same reports indicate that the economic position of France is better than that of other countries at the opening of 1931, and that the trend of business is downward. Unemployment has not been important in France although it has increased during the past few months.

While the World has been turning upside down, the French have continued to hold their balances and their budgets are exactly the same, standing Congresses. If all of them introduced in this one were allowed, it would confront a deficiency so appalling that recognition would shock the lips of every citizen. But those rejected are generally quite as meritorious as those which pass. And men are industrious and its women charitable have become so abundant that sense of them cluster behind and around every retiring bill as they across, whatever its nature.

You Wouldn't Have Time for All This Reading

Q Every American wants to know more about the building of his nation than the schoolbook histories tell him, but few of us have time to pore over the many volumes necessary for that. The Illustrated feature articles by Elmo Scott Watson which appear regularly in this paper offer an answer to that need. You will find in them a wealth of interesting information on little-known chapters in American history—fact stories more fascinating than fiction.

TO SCHOOL CHILDREN; Teachers find these articles helpful in classes. Some students are making scrapbooks of them. Tell your teacher and your classmates about them!

Q Those articles also cover other fields—popular science, sports, industry, the fine arts and literature; in fact, every phase of American interest. This newspaper considers itself fortunate in being able to give its readers such articles as those by one of the leading feature writers of the country today. Tell your friends about them if they haven't seen them yet.

FRATERNAL PROTECTION

WITH A 48-YEAR RECORD OF SUCCESS

In a little Iowa town, Modern Woodmen of America was organized in 1883. Its purpose was to broaden the social opportunities of farm, town and city, to promote fraternal activities in various communities and to provide life insurance protection for its members. • So successfully has it done these things that Modern Woodmen of America now has more than thirteen thousand local camps in forty-six states and four Canadian provinces, has become the largest fraternal beneficiary society in the World, and has more than a billion dollars of life insurance protection in force.

• FOR THE FAMILY Protection for every member of your family is provided by Modern Woodmen of America at the lowest cost consistent with safety. On equal terms, this organization insures men and women, from sixteen to sixty, for amounts ranging from $500 to $10,000, and in such a variety of certificate forms that you can select one to fit the average need. There is even a Junior Insurance Department for children under sixteen. For the benefit of members who become afflicted with tuberculosis a free sanatorium is maintained in Colorado.

• SAFE AND SOUND Modern Woodmen of America is 100% actuarially solvent. Its claims are paid, ($455,000,000 to date) and will continue to be paid promptly and in full. Its modernized plan of insurance is safe, sound and meets all requirements. To be insured in Modern Woodmen of America is to enjoy unusual benefits in addition to the safety of its insurance guaranteed by the required reserves.

• GET MORE DETAILS One or more of the thirteen thousand Modern Woodmen Camps must be in your neighborhood. For more information as to benefits of membership and how you can protect your dependents, see the local camp clerk or deputy, or write to the Head Offices. Decide today to do this.

The Holy Bible is the Great Light of the craft, and one that we shall follow if we would be true to our principles and successful in the standard re. way of truthsoldier points that strengthens and adorns the character of man.

It will lead us into the temple of true and abiding happiness, and secure for us an entrance into the [illegible] Grand Lodge above. It enriches the memory, it cultivates the imagination, it disciplines the judgment, it moves the affections, it controls the passions it quickens the conscience, it strengthens the will, it makes the sacred flame of Faith, Hope and Charity, it purifies, enables and sanctifies the whole man, and we go him into loving union with God.

It has light for the blind, strength for the weak, food for the hungry, drink for those who are athirst, it has a counsel to present for every sorrow, a balm for every wound. In all the books in the world, the Bible is the only book of which the more you study it, the more you admire and love more and more as we use it. Like a diamond, it casts its light in every direction. Love a seed, the more it is shaken the better it shines. Like a bonding herb, the more it is pressed the sweeter is the fragrance. The Holy Bible has kept bright for every member of the Order, and priests and the whole duty of man. Walk in the great light that you enjoy to fleet honor upon the Order, whose foundation principles and the truth are these.

Then by other emblems: we are taught to regulate our actions and our every movement by the square, as a symbol of morality and virtue, and in our intercourse with mankind, to act by the unerring standard of truth and justice, and to harmonize and unite the scattered members of the human family in the bonds of love, fervent charity and brotherly kindness.

With an increasing number of hunters in the Michigan woods, which reported a large toll of hunting accidents during the past few years, the association announced.

THE FIRST IRON

The first pair of Iron Successfully accomplished at the Pine Lake furnace on Sunday.

The past week or two has been occupied at the Pine Lake Iron Company's plant in running up the details which had been overlooked, carefully and successfully perfected before the completion and setting of the various pieces of the "iron cast."

Flue was put into the stack early last week, and on Saturday was the hot blast turned in and the furnace actually "at blast." At four o'clock Saturday afternoon the first running, with all the superintendent, Mr. Bradley, proudly assisting, ascended the stage and shoveled in several upright stages, which pumps and bellows forced on. It was he said that the lady at that moment transmitted unto her final hands life and power which is destined to do so much in the future development of Charlevoix county, and the whole region. It was indeed a momentous event.

Mr. Bradley is not less momentous in his congratulations to the men on the first product of our new enterprise in state fish hatcheries, as the result of a discovery by the Mains Department of Interior.

The pens the worst cause of loss to the hatcheries, where many millions of fish are raised annually to replenish our waters, has been a fun gus growth which killed the young fish.

Through the experiments the Maine men have found that this fungus can be destroyed if the fish are given specific acid baths. Commissioner Oliver S. Stubbs has informed the American Game Association.

He now each hatchery's trouble-some problem of fungus on fish eggs will be overcome. Instead of the "chicken and eggs" regularly, with the fish and eggs.

TAXATION A BURDEN — CAN REDUCTIONS BE MADE TO RELIEVE OVERLOAD

Financial expansion, the outgrowth of an era of prosperity and a resulting dissipation of public funds have brought about a serious crisis in Michigan taxation, declared Clarence L. Ayres, acting president of the Public Utility League of Michigan and chairman of Governor Brucker's new council on state finances, speaking over radio station WXYZ.

Ayres said his organization was in possession of instances after instances where men were losing cottages, homes and farms because of their inability to meet the terrific burden of taxation and other items of maintenance.

"A man in Berkley," he said, "owns a house with an assessed valuation of $2,800. In 1929 the total taxes, including special assessments, were $276.83, or nearly 9% of the assessed valuation.

"A man and his wife own a home in Oakville which has an assessed valuation of 2,200. In 1929 the total taxes, with special assessments were $270.69, or more than 12% of the assessed valuation.

"And to this high percentage of taxes of these properties taken as to taxes, the ordinary upkeep of the property and the expenses of maintaining a home. You can then readily understand why families are losing their homes, and becoming in many cases charges of the state."

There is no legal reason, "Ayres said, "why their should not be standardization of plans and specifications of both individuals and to the requirements of school facilities of the different districts of the state, to be promulgated by local school boards whose business it would be to study local requirements, but approved or disapproved by some central division of state government in the interest of standardization and economy.

Nothing must be done to alleviate this unwarranted burden of taxation and the state government must shoulder the responsibility, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage by virtue of the above, and the mortgagee will cause to be sold at public auction to the highest bidder the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage and all legal costs and attorney fee.

A DIURETIC FOR THE KIDNEYS

The Washington Bicentennial

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

BEGINNING a year hence, February 22, 1932, and extending until Thanksgiving day of next year, there will be observed throughout the United States the greatest celebration ever conducted for a national hero. It is the celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington and comprises the greatest assemblage of outstanding Americana, which is now exhibited in primitive form anywhere. The commission, officially known as the United States Commission of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of George Washington, has the following personnel:

The President of the United States, chairman; the vice president of the United States, and the speaker of the house of representatives; Senators Hiram D. Fess, Ohio, vice chairman; Arthur Capper, Kansas; Carter Glass, Virginia, and Lee S. Overman, North Carolina; Representatives Willis C. Hawley, Oregon; John Q. Tilson, Connecticut; Joseph W. Byrns, Tennessee, and B. Walton Moore, Virginia. Presidential appointments: Mrs. John Hinckley Wheeler, Georgia; Mrs. Anthony Wayne Cooke, Pennsylvania; Henry Ford, Michigan; George R. Sheldon, New York; C. Bascom Slemp, Virginia; Wallace Nesbitt, Oregon; Albert Sidney Burleson, Texas; Mrs. Minnie Maddern Fiske, New York; Mrs. Mary Lee Fitzhugh Washington, Virginia; Frederick Trubee Davison, New York; Mrs. Edward M. Bacon, New York. The associate directors under whose management the plans are being organized and executed are Colonel William Hall III, and Representative Sol Bloom of New York.

According to the program now being worked out by the associate directors, every man, woman and child in the United States will be given an opportunity to participate in the observance of this great Bicentennial. The celebration will be nation-wide and will reach every village hamlet and town in the country. In order to centre the interest of such a far-flung and all-inclusive program, there will be an exposition, no geographical demonstration of the celebration in the form of an exposition. The commission wishes to entrust all such material plans. There will be no great demonstration of the progress of America in this sense, although a reflection of the things for which George Washington strived will serve to emphasize in the minds of all the foreigners which are subject to his country and to the development of an assembling of evidences of wealth and prosperity there is to be an emphasis upon the materialistic awakening to the battle of all people of appreciation of the character and the life of America's greatest citizen.

However, the material side of the celebration will not be entirely neglected. One of the things for which George Washington strived was access to employment in the minds of all the foreigners which are subject to his country and to the development of an assembling of evidences of wealth and prosperity there is to be an emphasis upon the materialistic awakening to the battle of all people of appreciation of the character and the life of America's greatest citizen.

1. One of the atrocities which those who attend the 1932 celebration will visit—Washington's tomb at Mount Vernon.

2. The memorial George Washington Masonic Memorial building, which is nearing completion atop a high hill overlooking Alexandria, Va.

3. The Father of His Country as he will appear on a new stamp. The portrait of George Washington, owned by the Washington family of Richmond, Va., and believed to be based on the paint-ing by Charles Willson Peale, is one which Postmaster General Brown wishes to reproduce on one of the series of $4.19 issues which the Post Office department expects to issue in connection with the 1932 celebration.

4. A model of the huge George Washington Memorial building which is to be erected in Washington in the Mall area, on Pennsylvania avenue, not far from the Capitol. It will contain one of the largest auditoriums in Washington, to be used for patriotic and other public gatherings, and it is hoped to be completed by 1932.

In the Library of Congress, for many years there has been a collection of Washington manuscripts and papers written by Washington which have never before been published. In order to prepare these material for publication, the commission has appointed a special committee on Washington writings. The committee, headed by Dr. John C. Fitzpatrick of the Library of Congress, will carefully edit and publish the letters and papers of which Washington was the author, and will also have charge of the search for interesting and important.

Under the direction of the executive department, Col. U. S. Grant III and Representative Sol Bloom, who have direct charge of the plans for the celebration, an office is to be established in Washington which is now busily engaged in carrying on the work of assembling information to all parts of the country concerning material to be used in preparing plans which will enable the people to take a part in the celebration and bring records for future reference.

The following memorandum is of current importance for the formulation of plans for the proper observance of the Bicentennial of Washington's birth. However, the list of each state for the year 1932 has been omitted in several states and groups and it is expected that the governors and legislative bodies of the several states and territories will appoint commissions or other agencies to outline the work in their respective localities. Further information will be given out by the state commissions of the national group which in turn responds upon the lines for support.

Among the proposals for country wide celebration of the Bicentennial is a suggestion made by William Tyler Page, clerk of the house of representatives and executive secretary of the commission, that 100 carefully selected pageants, commissioned by states and cities.

FEBRUARY

"A great Memorial day for Washington, on February 22, with the inauguration of the year's program.

"Formal dedication of the national memorials erected or reconstructed by the national government in memory of George Washington.

"Meeting of the governors of all of the states.

"Memorial session by the President of the United States in each of the states.

"At night, great historical pageant of the life of Washington, with marvelous music, broadcast all over the world. John Philip Sousa has consented to compose a Bicentennial Washington march.

"Tribute to Washington spoken over the radio by world rulers and statesmen.

MARCH

"The welcoming to Washington as guests of the nation the descendants of all Presidents of the United States on Washington's day, March 4.

"Dedication of portraits of the Presidents in the George Washington university, with tributes by governors of the states presenting the portraits.

"A special day set by the President and Congress, and all living former Presidents and vice presidents, and representation of the characteristics of inauguration parades from the time of Jefferson.

"In the evening a great social event, probably a revival of the historic inaugural ball.

"Dedication at the White House.

"All over America—in all schools, colleges, etc.—tributes paid to the Presidents of the United States. A day of exaltation of the high office of Chief Executive of the United States.

APRIL

"A special library celebration.

"A time of examination of religion in the life of the nation all over America.

"A procession in the city of Washington of the chiefs of all tribes under the flag of the United States.

"High tribute to Washington as a churchman, with the message by a world-renowned preacher, to be broadcast all over America.

MAY

"A special celebration here and over the nation on Mother's day to exalt motherhood, and especially the mother of George Washington.

May Day—a day of tribute to all heroes of the republic, with a parade (day or night), with blue and gray, and khaki alike by order—a nation marching together. Great services at Arlington and elsewhere in memory of the heroic dead.

"Opening or closing a week of reunions of the Grand Army of the Republic, Confederate soldiers, veterans of the Spanish-American war, American Legion, veterans of World war, etc. The greatest Memorial day in America ever observed, with the life of George Washington as a soldier and statesman exalted as the exemplar in time of war and in peace.

JUNE

"On June 14, Flag day, a day of vast outdoor pageantry participated in by every state that has a star in the flag, respect for the flag of the United States being the keynote—the flag which symbolizes the republic of which Washington.

JULY

"An old-fashioned Fourth of July with parades, universal decorations of homes and public buildings, fireworks, music, oratory, and a great ovation on the anniversary of the Declaration of Independence—all broadcast.

"Let the same scenes and events be repeated in every city and town in America, the original 13 states to be responsible for the observance of this day and not these high schools.

"The means of celebrations in the various sections in America, giving always at Washington, with events daily in the open air that will thrill the multitudes of pilgrims from all over America. Special trains and automobile routes will be established, and facilities ought to be provided in August, and possibly in September.

SEPTEMBER

"George Washington knew what it meant to labor with his hands as well as with his brain. He was also an engineer of note. He knew, therefore, the elements of architecture and employed for this all honorable labor was sacred. On Labor day, dedicated to him, and written of America by him, let them remember thankfully the father of a country in which those who labor are esteemed as the very salt of America's development.

"A gathering in Washington of the educational authorities, with the object of government establishment in memory of George Washington in George Washington university as the principal objective and the placing before them of the resources they must take in the Americanizing of Americans in its future.

OCTOBER

"Columbus and Roosevelt days should be appropriately celebrated.

"In pageant, military pictures, orations, great assemblies and so forth, there will over the republic show America the great events of the age—from the discovery of the continent to the opening of the Pacific at Panama and the rise of America from four states of Columbus to the great leadership of today under the influence and example of George Washington. A month of exhibitions of achievements of the year in all lines of sports. George Washington was an athlete and followed in physical culture and health for example.

NOVEMBER

"The glorification on Thanksgiving day of the American home and the old-fashioned ideals of America in the midst of a new age. Special features all over America to our mothers and fathers, and the incineration of reverence and love for age, home, and country.

"Every qualified American citizen, in the spirit of George Washington, exercising at the Presidential elections at the sacrifice of personal inconvenience, if necessary, the inestimable privilege of an American sovereign in voting for President, the ministers of his choice, realizing that it is par-amount of the people to be trained in the broadest duty and responsibility of every American in participation in the activities of the nation."

GEORGE KRUSKIE IS NOT LOCATED

Strenuous efforts to locate George Kruskie a fisherman at Cross Village who left Cross Village on the ice floe on last Friday, have been persistent and thus far without success. Anyone having any information as to whether or not he took his life has been discovered, will please notify Agent McIlquham at Boyne City, as he is naturally possible, search the region. Several airplanes have been pressed into service and local Cross Village hunting parties are engaged in the search. The light is difficult to reach at this season of the year. Several attempts have been made to cover the distance in the light. All have failed, due to treacherous ice conditions extending for a mile or more in all directions from the shoals upon which the fishing shanty is.

FARM ACCOUNT PROJECT STARTS NEW YEAR. MARCH 1

One of the most important and interest undertakings to be carried on by Charlevoix County Farmers is that of keeping Farm Records to enable them to find out the profit of the years work, as well as to discover the relative efficiency of each each part of the farm business.

In March First two years records will have been finished and the third year started. One of the greatest surprises that the Co-operators have noted thus far is the large amount of money being handled during the year from the sale of eggs, dairy products and crops sales and the cost of the feed and supply bills necessary to make the income possible.

Farmer who keep Farm Records have found it to be of great value to the inventory of the lesser farm buildings, equipment, machinery, feed and supplies on hand at the beginning. When this is done the farmers begin to realize what a large business he is managing and the importance of having a thorough knowledge of how efficient each farm department is toward the entire total.

Different from the last couple of years there will be no school of instruction for new beginners as this project has grown so rapidly in the State that not enough extension help is possible to hold these local meetings. Instead, County Agent Mellenkamp will be very glad to outline the project to all farmers desiring to enroll for the new year, beginning March first. In this method every beginner may have a complete outline of the project and the manner and method of keeping records will be carefully explained.

I am very hopeful that a large number will want to enroll this year.

Please notify County Agent Mellenkamp, at Boyne City, and he will be very glad to visit you and include your name with some forty others already carrying out this most important activity associated with successful agriculture.

mark, giving evidence of how closely he was guarded. During the last half the local team guarded all the boyne players closely and only one basket was scored against our defense. For Boyne City the leading scorer was White, with 8. Sandel made 5 and Fox made 2.

Boyne City won both the preliminaries, but the contests were very close. The Boyne City Junior High won from the local team by the score of 4 to 2. The only basket for Charlevoix was made by Charles Carey. Others on the local team were Jack Foster, Bill Bergman, Mile Miller, Jack Withers, James Striggett, and Robert Pearl.

Boyne City Reserves won from the Fighting Irish by the score of 9 to 6. For Charlevoix Winfield Kirby and Foster, and Bill Clark each made one field goal. Others who played were Dale McCann, Dave Livingston, Homer Brothers, Emerald Chew and David Pick. The Boyne City bunch was a lot bigger than the Charlevoix players.

Tomorrow evening the three local teams will go to East Jordan for basketball contests there. We expect the first team to win, but refuse to commit ourselves on the others. Next Tuesday, Boyne City comes here primed for revenge for the 13 to 7 spark plug. Some of the Charlevoix bands rather in the awe. Personally we have doubts as to whether Traverse City gets its wish.

CARNIVAL DAY RACE RESULTS

HOCKEY GAME TO TRAVERSE BIG CROWD IN ATTENDANCE

The following are the winners of the first and second places of the various races held last Tuesday on the Charlevoix Winter Carnival Day.

Cross-Country Ski Race—Clarence Arnold; Harold Newman.

Hundred of Muskegon and George Bergman of this city also entered the four mile race, but dropped out. Round Lake and across Lake Charlevoix.

Dog Races—James Brady's dog, second, and Robert Pearl's dog, second. (There were eight entries).

Quarter-mile Ski-doo—(Junior) Robert Ashton, Marshall O'Neill.

Quarter-mile ski dash—(Senior) Archie Swanson, Clarence Arnold.

Skating Races—Girls Under Ten—Billie Meyers, Rosanna Partridge.

Girls Under Seven—"Bud" Bergman, Atchie Livingston.

Girls Under Twelve—Gertrude Braun, Virginia Crawford, both of Petoskey.

Boys under Twelve—Homer Golden, (Petoskey) Bruce Withers.

Girls Under Fourteen—Gerald Lanchen, Dorothy Goldstick, Livingston.

Girls Under Seventeen—Byrnece Lamphear, Janet Livingston.

Boys Under Seventeen—David Livingston, Dan Fredette (Petoskey).

Girls' Free-for-all—Jean Webb, Esther Chichester, both of Petoskey.

Boys' Free-for-all—Charles Meiborn (Petoskey) David Livingston.

In the Skating races Petoskey entries won six out of ten first places with all the rest going to Charlevoix. Charlevoix skaters therefore win the meet by a score of 41 to 39.

Charlevoix had no competition at all in the other events, all first and second place winners being local entries.

fect enforcement and only three years of re-organization and effort to repair the mistakes of the earlier period. The older generation very largely has forgotten and the younger never knew the evils of the saloon and the corroding influence upon politics, both local and national, of the organized liquor interests. But the tradition of that rottenness still lingers, even in the minds of the bitterest opponents of the prohibition law, and substantially all of whom admit that the licensed saloon must never be restored.

It is because I see no escape for its return in any of the practicable alternatives to prohibition that I unite with my colleagues in agreement that the Eighteenth Amendment must not be repealed and, differing with some of them I have been forced to conclude that, a further trial should be made of the enforcement of the amendment under the present organization, with the help of the recommended improvements."

STRIKING VIEW OF WASHINGTON SHAFT

New and striking picture of the towering obelisk.

Shaft Planned to Rise Above Washington's Tomb

Plan for completion of the Washington monument was announced recently by Horace Albright as a boon for the 22nd President.

That event is many generations off, the Interior Bureau chief is a patriotic optimist, however, in view of the fact that the shaft is already 555 feet 5 1/8 inches above the ground, and has been standing 84 years as it is.

The keystone is planned to be completed in 1937, the 200th anniversary of the birth of George Washington, his mother rather than he is credited as the man who planted the cherry which Mount Vernon stands.

"Requisitioned" President

The congress in assigning George Washington of the shadow to the revolutionary settlement a letter to the nation by John Langdon of New Hampshire president of the senate pro tempore, and this letter was carried to Mount Vernon on the 16th of April. He was secretary of the Continental congress, serving from 1774 to 1778. Washington was not officially counted at 57 in whether he would serve.

EQUIPMENT

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

We come upon a group of intense students one day last autumn as we were riding through the campus. Two were standing, two sitting, and one was lying on the ground. All were intently engaged in discussing a problem which apparently was of the greatest importance. Their attitudes and expressions were those of men who were thinking hard and thinking fast.

Everything that they could read in their books was going into their heads. Their minds were being fed with facts.

Suddenly one of the students broke out: "They don't know what they are getting for their money. They are not getting what they came here for. They are getting what they don't want and can't use. They are being fed a bewildering hodge-podge of information and told that unless they remember it all they will not succeed in the age of specialization. They are being worn out with facts and figures and they are bored with the whole business. They are not getting an education. They are getting a mental indigestion."

His words found him an eager audience. They were voicing the thoughts of many students. Their minds were being fed with facts. They were being worn out with facts and figures. They were bored with the whole business. They were not getting an education. They were getting a mental indigestion.

Their complaint was not a new one. Something like it has been heard in every generation since the days of Socrates. It is a complaint against the mechanization of education. It is a protest against the tendency to make education a matter of the accumulation of facts rather than the development of the mind.

It is a protest that is justified. Education is not the accumulation of facts. It is the development of the mind. It is the training of the mind to think. It is the training of the mind to use its powers. It is the training of the mind to use its powers in the solution of problems.

Facts are necessary. They are the raw material of education. But facts are not education. They are not the end of education. They are the means to the end of education.

Education is the development of the mind

COMPLACENT LAWMAKERS TRY TO PLEASE

Receipts from the Internal Revenue Bureau for the year 1930, on income tax account were $1,116,000,000 less than of the preceding year. The tax was based upon incomes of 1929, which were, for us to some of them, of 1930. Hence, the shrinkage of receipts for 1931 under those that required will be very large, although the normal assessment rates will replace those prevailed for 1930. Shrinkage will be inadequate to the 1931 receipts from normal from other sources will while the total revenue must be roughly estimated by laymen at this time, yet approximate figures are available only to Treasury officers.

This economist outlook, unfortunately has for terms for a Congress whose thoughts are beginning to center upon a rapidly approaching election involving the political fortunes of its new members. These politicians are concerned not only with the maintenance of party and Presidential prestige and results as with their own immediate fate. They will therefore submit serenely upon their respective constituencies whose requirements they know only as expressed primarily in terms of greenbacks which must be satisfied through appropriations of the public funds. Deficiencies therefore may mean only deficiencies in the eyes of the people of the Government for patriotical "relief," attainable through borrowings. Repayment of loans will appeared at once, or he will be heard from, in a manner which can be appreciated at the polls in the next elections. These officials have not often and too long assured their seats on a platform of "economy" in Government in theirs and the various interests, to hesitate now, but to vote when taken at their word.

The reasons are now astounding reflect the views of and the country as well for Government ownership of some utilities and Government regulation of many utilities and Government competition with some others. They evidently want both and cannot be reconciled with long. Our confidence together are eager, to comply regardless of policy or consequences, since by this means only can they make their respective callings and positions sure. It has indeed if either of these competing demands are substantially obeyed, a new economics era begins and the to turn ordained in parliament, and in consultance in fact, will suffer from the Soviet Republics readily as the economists the agent of appropriation political and other wise, will have ended for the first of classes.

MICHIGAN BELL TELEPHONE CO.

"Some one of our family always is away"

Said Mrs. Adams in her cabin

"For we manage to keep in close touch by means the old phone, Mr. Adams calls home several times a week when he is away on business trips, and we have a family reunion every month or so at my brother's home in college. And I sometimes hunger after grandchildren . . . so enjoy our telephone visits so much.

Daily, more and more people are discovering how easy it is to keep in touch with friends and relatives by telephone. Note how pleasant telephone visits are and how little they actually cost.

For instance, consider the following conversational rates for home service. Day and night long distance calls:

Detroit to Grand Rapids	$ .85
Menominee to Iron Mountain	1.00
Lansing to Saginaw	1.00
Saginaw to Benton Harbor	1.00

ISN'T THIS THE TRUTH?

Recognizing the fact that people cannot be legislated into either prosperity or perfection the State Chamber of Commerce of California met the issue created by new and restrictive laws by adopting a brief, but comprehensive resolution which, if inwardly digested by the Legislature will go far in aiding restoration of public confidence, while permitting the business world to speedily find its way back to a sane and normal status without hazardous adventuring into the by-paths and blind alleys which freak and unnecessary legislation create.

This resolution, which sets a new and stimulating corrective standard, reads: "Whereas, government can and best by giving business several years of freedom from restrictive and opportunities to facilitate their operations and get back on their feet and,

"Whereas, one of the handicaps under which business and industry labor during a legislative year is the fear of new and restrictive laws, therefore,

"Be it resolved, by the directors of the California State Chamber of Commerce, that they hereby appeal to the members of the California State Legislature and other law makers to the end that during the next year they refrain from making laws which would add to the difficulty or expense of doing business, agriculture and industry, and in their effort to improve general conditions in a normal way and provide employment without building a burden of public debt."

The only credit that humanity needs, as a matter of practice, is the credit it gives itself. And certainly no even the most zealous "anti-power" advocate, would suggest returning to conditions of 20 years ago.

In view of all this, one wonder just what the power issue is.

REDUCE EXPENDITURES

"The most certain way of providing tax relief is to start the study of expenditures without depressing the people of material governmental services. This is the only way to solve the tax question.

No tax relief will ever be brought about by shifting the burden from one group to another, or by finding new sources of revenue.

The people of Colorado should gain a vote of thanks to a public official who is honest enough to make such a statement. They should pension him for life if he can help them get actual tax relief.

JAPAN FOLLOWS UNITED STATES

According to recent dispatches, the Japanese Government has decided to transfer the control of her telephone system to a private company. It is to the present this control has been in the hands of the Government.

Japan is indeed in an enviable position in one regard, she is single and adjusting accidental ways of doing and means to live upon cash without being bound by years of convention. Undoubtedly when the telephone was brought to Japan, the European system of paying it a government monopoly was followed. Then, look-ing at the use and abuse of the telephone throughout the world, Japan has come to the conclusion that private ownership of the telephone, such as we enjoy in the United States, is more advantageous to the people as a whole. Whatever opinion one with may hold of the Japanese, they do not lack reasonable people — From the Iras News.

FIRE WASTE GOES UP

Nineteen-thirty may have been a "depression year," but in one phase of our economic life we managed to register an "advance" over 1929—in fire waste. According to the National Board of Fire Underwriters, the total loss for the year was about $403,612,000, as compared with $402,215,000 in the preceding twelvemonth.

The highest yearly loss on record, of more than half a billion, occurred in 1926, and then for three succeeding years the rate went down. It appeared that America was paying some heed to the lesson of fire prevention. But now fire waste is again ascending, due principally to carelessness and ignorance.

Only a great cooperative movement, on a national scale, can allay the fire evil. We observe, annually, a fire prevention week. The exercise of caution, of ordinary commonsense, would as readily lead us to observe a fire prevention year. A glance at the statistics should prove to the thinking citizen that fire waste is a problem, of both avoid and economic importance, that every American should study

STRENGTHEN LOCAL GOVERNMENT

In his recent inaugural address, Governor Roosevelt of New York strongly advocated a strengthening of local government. He pointed out that if we "follow the easy road of centralization of authority" we may find, "discover too late, that our liberties have disappeared."

"Centralization of authority—which results inevitably in the denial of bureaucracy and the rise of government by commission—has already captured many of our liberties. The old idea of government, by which each state was a separate entity, has been warped out of shape. Washington has shown an increasing tendency to dictate to all parts of the nation.

We pay for this in two ways—in less freedom and in higher taxes. Thirty years ago one family out 22 lived at the expense of the government. Today the ratio is one out of 11.

The present congress is being besieged to more than an ordinary degree with proposals that would create new departments, new expenses, new bureaucrats. Governor Roosevelt is timely when he says we must "discover too late that our liberties have disappeared.

THE UTILITY INVESTMENT COMPANY

The public utility investment company was the force which made possible the extension of electric service to small towns on a scale comparable to the steam railroads in the great cities. Mass production and distribution of power, like mass production and distribution in any other line, results in greatly increased efficiency, economy, standardization of service and possibilities for extensions and progress. Now the public utility investment company is doing for the farm what it did for the small town.

Today hundreds of thousands of farms enjoy the advantages of unlimited, reasonably-priced electric power. A single utility investment company, consisting of a group of separate electric companies, is furnishing service to 45000 small communities and to more than 1,000 farms in thirty states. The farmer who has received wasteful power with economical machine power, and whose home is electrically lighted and equipped is the latest beneficiary of large scale electrical development.

The industrial age was the result of the application of mechanical power to tasks that were once done by human labor. The great progress and improved living standards of this worker followed. So, now, in agriculture progressing. Electricity, coupled with good roads, telephones, and the spread of factories to small towns, is swiftly putting the rurales on the same basis as his city cousin.

NO POWER ISSUE

When President Hoover said that there is no more either for or against the power question he brought out a fact that other public officials might with advantage followed. So, now, is more reason for injecting politics in to the power business than into any other business.

The power industry produces and sells a certain commodity—electricity—and in so far as the consumer is best service at the lowest possible cost. Because the business must be non-competitive individual localities the people have established commissions whose duty it is to see that standards of service are kept up and rates maintained at a fair level.

However, in a large sense, the power companies compete with each other. They are attempting to sell their respective power for their money than other localities receive. That is only the part of wisdom and good practice.

The day of the small local plant is growing uncertain and expensive service. In every Great interconnected systems, with almost unlimited facilities, have made it possible to serve small towns and many rural sections with the same standards of service as do large cities. And certainly no

In view of all this, one wonder just what the power issue is.

THE RAILROAD TAX SITUATION

It is estimated that railroad taxes will be reduced $256,000,000 in 1930—a reduction of 11 per cent under 1929. This reduction was primarily due, it is said, to the fact that federal taxes are income taxes, and decrease as income decreases.

The 11 per cent tax reduction was accompanied by a drop of 16 per cent in railroad gross revenues. Relatively, therefore, the 1930 tax burden was the heaviest the lines have ever carried.

Last year taxes took 6.6 cents out of every railroad dollar, as compared with 5.3 cents in 1929. They counted for 15 per cent of net revenue, which means that one-quarter of all railroad facilities were operated for

MICHIGAN BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY STATISTICS

Net income of the Michigan Bell Telephone company for 1930 was $3,557,681.94, or only 3⅓ per cent on the plant investment of $106,-846,709.79 in 1929, according to the annual report of the company's operations submitted to the stockholders in their annual meeting Thursday, 1February 12), by President Burch Parker for the board of directors.

The report shows that total telephone operating revenues last year were $11,502,906.93, and operating expenses, including taxes, $10,579,661.63, leaving a net operating revenue of $10,923,235. Deductions of $4,104,311.07 for taxes and $255,166.08 in uncollectable revenues left an operating income of $6,283,258.13. Non-operating revenues, $6,651,868.15. Rent and interest on investments and bank balances, rent revenues and miscellaneous items, resulted in a gross income of $12,935,126.28. Interest paid, including miscellaneous deductions, was $3,894,186.61, making a balance net income of $9,041,-681.54. From surplus and current earnings a dividend of 5 per cent was paid on the stock.

Rate of net earnings to cost of plant and other assets decreased in the third consecutive year. Earnings

1928	5.76%

During 1930, the larger plant expansion projects of the company included opening three new dial central offices on new buildings in Detroit, erection of a new central office building for a new control office in Dearborn, completion of a new building in Detroit; establishment of a new dial central office in suburban warehouse, garage and a new building at Holland; completion of a new service office building at Benton Harbor and Grand Haven, and installation of a manual central office in the latter; completion of a central office and administration building at Saginaw; completion of a new warehouse and garage building at Grand Rapids; installation of new dial central offices in the new buildings at Port Huron and Macatawa Park, installation of new long distance cables between Detroit, one of the largest in the world; placing in service of new long distance cables between Jackson and Lansing and between Benton Harbor and South Haven, and extension of the Grand Rapids-Marne long distance cable to Grand Haven.

The largest single construction but not completed in 1930, include four new dial central offices in Detroit, the installation of new dial central offices at Saginaw and Benton Harbor, erection of new buildings at Big Rapids and Kalamazoo and the building of new long distance cables to be between Grand Rapids and Big Rapids and between Saginaw and Reese.

A loss in telephones was indicated during 1930 for the first year in the history of the company. The report shows that 198,331 telephones were installed and 208,549 discontinued during the year, net loss being 10,218 telephones, compared with a gain of 48,512 in 1929. On December 31, 1930, the company had 668,317 telephones in service.

is the favorite argument of many of our internationalists who propose placing Uncle Sam in the League of Nations. But the League Court, that we must join immediately in order to prevent another world catastrophe similar to the great war. They start from the assumption that the world is again about to be plunged into bloody strife and that it is only our entrance into the game of foreign politics which can prevent it. Now the League of Nations and the World Court are already going concerns. It is true that Uncle Sam remains on the outside, wisely as most Americans think, and it is equally true that he is now as he has always been, ready and willing to cooperate for world peace. Just how our more entrance into a world political organization will prevent the outbreak of hostilities, these internationalists do not take the trouble to explain. As we can cooperate just as well if not better on the outside than within, there must be some other reason. Perhaps they feel that if Uncle Sam were once tied up securely he would be bound to use his army and navy in the prevention" of peace. If this is the reason for our entry into the League, we continue to believe that it is better for our safety to remain on the outside.

As a matter of fact our getting ourselves mixed up in foreign entanglements would not tend to assure the peace of the world, but rather to assure more trouble for Uncle Sam. It seems to be a sort of unreasoning belief on the part of internationalists that we can do nothing unless securely bound by some political arrangement. And yet it is a matter of fact that during the past ten years all great constructive steps for peace have been taken outside the League of Nations and outside the World Court. The disarmament conference, the Locarno Pact and the Kellogg treaty are examples. It is true, too, that there has been much discussion inside the League and that the members themselves were not to regard it with suspicion, rather than with confidence.

Speaking of international agreements outside the League and the League Court, the recent agreement on the production and marketing of rubber is a good example. That agreement on the limitation of naval is the interest of the sugar producing everywhere, was brought about under the leadership of our American Mr. Thomas A. Edison, of New York. It was brought about in villatory conference, resulting in a voluntary agreement on limitation of sugar production. Keep laughing! The new Ford is an economical car to own and drive

Low first cost, low cost of operation and up-keep, and low yearly depreciation mean a distinct saving to every purchaser

THE NEW FORD is a splendid car to own and drive because of its attractive lines and colors, safety, comfort, speed, reliability and long life.

There are, in addition, three other features of importance to every farming automobile owner . . . low first cost, low cost of operation and up-keep, and low yearly depreciation.

During the life of the car, the day-by-day economy of owning a Ford will amount to considerably more than the saving on the first cost. You save when you buy the Ford and you save every mile you drive.

The reasons for this economy are simplicity of design, high quality of materials and care in manufacturing and assembling. Many vital parts are made to limits of one one-thousandth of an inch. Some to three ten-thousandths of an inch. Throughout, the new Ford is an outstanding example of fine craftsmanship in automobile engineering.

The more you see of the new Ford—the more you talk to Ford owners and experienced mechanics—the more certain you become of this fact. . . . It brings you everything you want or need in a motor car at an unusually low price.

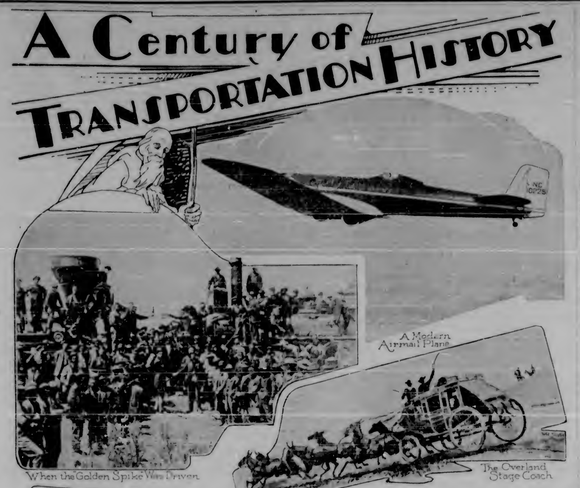
A Century of TRANSPORTATION HISTORY



All pictures except that of the Conestoga wagon), courtesy the Boeing Air Transport System.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THE recent inauguration of a sixhour airplane passenger service between New York and San Francisco not only marked the climax of eight years of transportation history but also one of the most historic events of travel on the North American continent, but it seems the attendants final chapter in that epic movement commonly referred to as "the westward push of white civilization." Although the frontier as a fact belongs to long past history, this pioneer belongs to the story of the frontier with commission and its rising.

That westward push began 300 years ago. It came about from "the dim shades of the Appalachian country, before the Carolinas or Pennsylvania were populous, before Van Amsterdam had been wrested from the Dutch, and while New England settlements still hugged the shore or clung to the mouths of rivers, a Virginian turned his face to the West and sought to penetrate the wilderness beyond the line of occupation of the forties." Capt. Abraham Wood was his name; the date was 1650; and he journeyed to the Appalachian Fort Henry, at the falls of the Appomattox river, where Petersburg, Va., now stands, to the Falls where the Ism and Shenandoah unite to form the Roanoke river. Bitter and thrice-assaulted Indian fighter that he was, Wood only stayed at the fort, it was important because it opened the mouth of the English wilderness toward the West. At the opening was built the log cabin and stores that made and the points of their descendants were never from thoughts of what lay beyond, and those who came for their fortunes went to go and see the mountains.

No better summary of this "westward push" has been written than that written by Rupert Hughes in "Colonel's Portrayed in the Lure of the Frontier," in the Lure Literary Press:

"Dozens of settlements sprang up in the zone that's two centuries and a half in width that made land for the settlement and skills of the West. It is now the Central States the fronts of settlement, but in succeeding years, upward beyond from position to position. The first frontier was the Seaboard, colonist vision of villages along the Atlantic coast, to the east of the Appalachians. Then the settlers of the Eighteenth century, the settlers of the Back Country, about Indian the eastern shadow of the Appalachian Mountains. Through across the coastal plain and the Piedmont plateau was slow, because the white population in the New world was as yet was battle and because transportation across the ocean and within the continent was difficult.

The last decades of the Eighteenth century saw Appalachian to penetration of a considerable area west of the Alleghenies—Kentucky, Tennessee, and a part of Ohio. The passing of the first spirit of the Westward thrust was due to Jefferson's and then the female settlement in the prairie lands west of the Mississippi. Wars and treaties during the old Southwest and other settlements pushing northward against the forests of Wisconsin and Michigan. By the end of the first half of the century frontiersmen, crossing the Great Plains and the western mountains, were fighting communities on the Pacific coast. In the following forty years the mountains and plains and all of the most arresting population movements in western history were of the settlement of the West. The development of its mechanic arts were fundamental causes of the westernization."

Nearly two hundred years of slow painful progress from the Atlantic to the Mississippi, and then, through the magic of improved transportation, a swift rush of less than 50 years to the Pacific! In 1806, when Capt. Abraham Wood set forth from Fort Henry with his mounted companions, leading their pack horses, the three-days journey from the Atlantic to the Pacific might only have been measured in months and years. Today, when the New York business man steps into an airplane, bound for a conference a fifth his associates in San Francisco, the same journey of over 2,500 miles Atlantic and the Pacific is measured in hours and minutes! And that, in brief, is the story of transportation in America.

Because of the many romantic elements in it, the most interesting period in the whole story is indeed in the generation of the last 100 years. Last year "The Covered Wagon Centennial" was celebrated from the trans-Mississippi West. It was celebrated because on April 10, 1830, the three leaders of a fur-trading company, Jedediah S. Smith, David E. Jackson and W. L. Sublette, sailing the end of their outfit of 81 men, ordered the guns and powder handed to the ten wagons in the wagon train and started out from St. Louis on the long. The same year eighty-three Americans crossed their reached the head of the Wind river in the Rockies was then still a hilly, newly defined land, and from the plains and through the mountains. By 1840 the "Oregon fever" was in full swing, and the new trails were always wheels of thousands of emigrants' wagons. In the following year, 1841, Fitz Hugh was the beginning of the famous Oregon or Overland Trail, along which over seven hundred thousand people were to go.

The Santa Fe-Salt Lake Stagecoach was not the first to run. In 1826 Jedediah Smith and Thomas Fitzpatrick had crossed the South Pass, the highest point in the Rockies, and in 1827 Smith, Jackson and Sublette had brought to the West in 1835 from Astoria, etc., knew that had been a first passage in the winter of 1830-31 by a band of the Astorians for company, and by subsequent free trappers who had not considered that the Great Unknown that was the Inner Mississippi West of the forty and of the Missouri country. But the transportation of all of these had been ridden and taken on the strength and hardship of the journey. The first stagecoach of the 1849 gents was then those were the first wheeled vehicles that were conquering white man traveled "—moving men in the route over which all the subsequent stage to transportation. This history were to be taken from water travel, through land travel in all its phases to the air.

White volumes have been written about this pageant of transportation, which poured over the historic Overland Trail, so it is possible within the limits of this article only to give the "high spots" in the form of a summary, as follows:

1800—South Carolina Soldiers' party, near the Missouri, went to Pensacola, the north of the present site of Omaha, made their famous migration to the valley of the Platte.

1806—The first commissioners with the cry of "Gold in California," blazing the greatest trading highway in the world—over and more beaten than a city street—and hundreds of thousands of wagons passed over it.

1836—The first monthly Wells Fargo boat stages began running from the Missouri to Salt Lake and California. The trip was now in full life of life, filled with gold seekers from the Mississippi to the Pacific.

1858—September 15—The first overland stage coach left San Francisco for the East and on

Trees Conserve Water

Trees in mountainous regions are valuable because they conserve water and the underground water supply. Trees absorb water through their roots and transpire it through their leaves and drawings. For every ounce of sap drawn through the roots, an ounce of water evaporates into the atmosphere. Thus a large tree may transpire hundreds of gallons of water in a day.

A single cottonwood 25 years old has been known to transpire 1,000 gallons in twenty hours, increased the rate of the water twice that fast on a partial of 30 years of heavy transpiration. The loss of so much water by trees in many regions, especially in Florida and Texas, is said to be caused by the presence of swamps.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

Although in this age of machine reproduction and standard goods, most of the larger business men designed the home with the forest in New York, I do not think the pets of the canine species, ranging in average dimensions, or weight, from a Chihuahua to a Great Dane, but the horse in its natural state, attached to a wagon or travel. You find them downtown when street, around the market section, pulling coal wagons, and crossing across the bridges from Long Island truck farms, it is not uncommon, dragging a wagon full of bricks and potted plants. I can remember when there were automobile permits

Variation in Rainfall

The largest annual rainfall of record was 8.05 inches in Yuma, Ariz., but the smallest of record was 0.00 in the West Indies, off the coast. Variations in rainfall have been caused by the height of the given area above the ocean and the nature from the ocean, whether it is land or water, or mountains and other less important factors.

No fast Eastern horse could keep pace with the Long Island horses in the days when there were automobile permits, which have now also been discontinued. Many of the horses were almost human in their intelligence. I remember one that would stop at every saloon on the route, and would not proceed unless a drink was forthcoming. Another would not proceed unless the driver had a cigar in his mouth. Many of the horses would not start from the curb unless the driver was sitting in the seat. The driver was compelled to whip the horse to get it started, and then he would jump on the seat and grab the reins. Many of the horses would not proceed unless they were talked to. Others would not proceed unless they were whistled to. Others would not proceed unless they were sung

PUBLIC SPENDING—UNLIMITED

Former President Coolidge has recently estimated our annual national tax bill at fifteen billions of dollars. According to the returns for 1929 the national income was sixty-nine billion of dollars. Assuming the correctness of Mr. Coolidge's statement it follows that our annual tax bill constitutes nearly 17 per cent of the national income; the figures nobody asks a constant increase in the tax burden whereof our highest previous figures were for 1926, and it is reasonably certain that the 1930 national income is very much less than in 1926. Here again we are confronted with an increasing tax burden based upon a decreasing income. Indeed, it may be said that the percentage of the latter must rise as long as the amounts increases and the amount of the former decreases.

One sometimes wonders whether the average Congressman reflects upon these conditions or whether he cares for them at all. Probably he pays no attention to the subject. He constituents' money appropriated for them. Likewise, he must grant more or endanger his seat.

But his constituents also demand Government control or ownership of many of our utilities, which of course necessitates other sources of revenue. The rationale, for example, are taxed to the limit, yet so thoroughly controlled that they cannot even sell their themselves from a falling competition. The power and light companies are marked either for absorption or destruction without regard to our dependence upon them for public revenue. It would be well therefore if public sentiment gave greater heed to these conditions which are most ominous and disconcerting. Let us hope that instead of longing for and predicting the return of prosperity we present to the consideration of the Congress a problem something like this: Confronted on the one hand with an increasing tax schedule and on the other with a declining rate of revenue, and a Governmental policy committed to unlimited appropriations on the one hand and restricting the national income on the other, when can prosperity or even an approach to it be expected? And if that expectation is now more remote than twelve months ago, who is more to blame for it than our national law makers? And the latter must sooner or later confront this query whether they will or not, for even the most enterprising of our national business leaders must sooner or later throw up their hands if the present policies shall long prevail.

Jews Flock to Palestine

According to the emissary, government's report to the League of Nations, there were 108,000 Jews in Palestine at the end of 1925, against 90,000 in 1918. The increase was accounted to 140,000, of whom 75,000 are said to be Jews. During the six years period the Jewish race population increased to 20,000. A government estimate puts the race population at the end of 1929 practically at the figure of 1,000,000.

"Gone Are the Tales That Once We Read"

The Firm of Beadle and Adams, 1862

Gone are the tales that once we read!
And some that come which stir less.
May equal those that filled the feud
Of Ralph Rockwood
Who thrilled with knightly prowess, clear,
In ventriloquism charm, inc. just,
"The deadly little spitz-wood dove
Another redskin bit the dust!"

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

YES, "gone are the tales that once we read"—gone, but not forgotten! For recent years have seen a revival of interest in the "Deng! Bang! Bang!" school of literature which has given the dime novel a place in respectable society that even its most ardent admirers—the juvenile sex, woodshed or backlot reading public of a bygone era—would never have believed possible.

While if one of the famous immortals of the day did say, "The dime novel isn't gone—it's been in a state never now and they're changing two leaders for it." You bet it isn't. The real dime novel is gone from the place it once held in the heart of American youngsters, but it is gone in an unrecognizable shape so very changed it would even have the young generation-ago favorites have been proclaimed by the majority of "dime novels" and "blood and thunder" stuff, who at a loss accept or agree without qualification to The Famous Hotel, or The Four Seasons of Verona story of "Beadle's Dime Novel Library," the Dime Song Hooker, or "Deadwood Dick, hunted to get a copy of one of these books, he would have to pay all the way from $5.00 to $20 for it.

More than that the Dime novel has recently received serious consideration from certain more staunch natures has itself been made the basis of a "Philosophic Discovery" by a distinguished American professor. If you would remember a friend of your childhood days, read Professor Pound's "Dime Novels; or, Following an Old Trail in Popular Literature," which throw power and vengeance of Justice published in those days and the short space of text of the first page is his book Mr. Pratesh summarizes the whole life long of the class of the Lord Jesus.

"Try, by strange chance, this lady who must be described by the words so dear to her own time—this lady who was so highly respectable—was to head off a series of books whose general name was a synonym for a literary profligacy."

First if the name of Mrs. Stephens, the author of the first dime novel, is all but forgotten, there are five other names which are not and which are not likely to be one of them was a native of Ohio, who in 1860 was a school teacher in Trenton, N. J. Edward S. Ellis was his name and he was born in 1840 and was still living in 1916. He was a prolific writer of "Seth Jones; or, The Captives of the Frontier." It was the first of a long series of such tales which were to come from his pen and it established a reputation for the author of the time novel.

The five other names of equal more importance for it is one which is synonymous with the name "dime novel." The publishers to whom Ellis delivered his manuscript were J. F. Beadle and company, later to be known as Beadle and company and still later as Beadle and Adams. As the name "Beadle dime novel" came into existence to stay and to be associated with the name and character which he made popular and pushed away.

Although the first three of the nine who J. F. Beadle, the head of the New York publishing House Beadle, who is generally credited with having the "father of the dime novel" was born in the "Upper country" (Otsego county) of New York in 1821 and "learned" the printing trade in Cooperstown. Later he opened a printing office in Buffalo and in 1860 issued in that city The Variety Song Sheet and Dramatic Journal. Soon afterward, Beadle, had been in the news business in Buffalo and had been successful in selling ballads and songs printed on a single sheet of paper. Erastus Beadle conceived his first novel a number of these songs in a pamphlet, called "The Dime Song Book" and the success of this gave the brothers the idea of issuing other literature for a dime. The result was that they moved to New York in 1858 where they began issuing "Jake Books," "Fast Books and Almanacs," "Letter Writers," "Dream Books" and "Dialogues and Books of Fun." The book is at a sporting, Robert Adams, a former business associate in Buffalo and the publication of "Malaeska." followed by "Seth Jones" marked the beginning of an enterprise that was almost instantaneously a success.

"There is no need to look for historical reasons for the immediate success of the Beadle dime novels . . ." says Prentiss. "They offered stories of adventure and new to the lowest rating with them. The were all for persons of cultivation to read in their literature. But for boys who were only beginning "Jake Books" were the milestones and farmers in camp.

"They were light and easily carried in the pack-et. It has often been pointed out that they could be read in street, concealed from the teacher by an arithmetic, or in church, hidden in the book-lined, or in the presence of one's parents, reasons flagged, indeed were permitted unquestioned.

"The Civil war was a fortunate event for the Beadle. Their books went to the front by the million. I think that . . . enormous number of dime were given by publishers, but there were also numerous instances in which the books were sent in to men in units, like Steward. They were shipped in cases, crates, and parcel boxes. When bundles of them arrived in camp, the surplus for barter or distribution. Many of the books would be torn from the . . . among the commodities which the Union soldier would exchange between the lines the Beadle novels were in great demand. Patriotic stories are told of blood-stained copies of dime novels found on dead men on the battlefield and of grief-stricken of wounded men who were left behind in their pockets."

For nearly 20 years the Beadle firm, under a variety of names representing changes in its partnership, flourished on the tens of still unsurpassed for the success of the dime novels successfully brought other publishers of this type of literature into the field—and when Street & Beadle retired in 1898 it was with a comfortable fortune, with the dime books had built up for him. He died in 1904.

No less interesting than the particulars of these dime novels were the men who wrote them and Mr. Peterson in his book gives some revealing glimpses of them which show that some had

How to Escape FLU

1 Avoid so far as possible the places where flu germs are most likely to be spread; overcrowded cars and public meeting places; overheated, stuffy rooms.

2 Be careful of close contact with others and beware of all coughers and sneezers; breathe through the nose, get fresh air, but avoid drafts or chilling.

3 Get lots of rest. Eat plenty of citrus fruits. Keep the bowels open. Take extra precaution to keep in good physical condition, so your system will have high resistance against germs.

4 Above all, avoid catching colds. They lower your resistance to the flu germ. Ward them off. At the first sign of any cold, take Bayer Aspirin and remain indoors if possible until your cold is gone. If you have a sore throat, dissolve some Bayer Aspirin tablets in water and gargle this will relieve the soreness and reduce the inflammation.

5 If you have any reason to suspect even a touch of flu, call your doctor at once.

"Gone Are the Tales That Once We Read"

The Firm of Beadle and Adams, 1862

Gone are the tales that once we read
And grieved when some fair maiden bled
Her crystal tears down the head
Of many a worthy villain.
Who thrilled with horror curses, when,
In convulsion there, but just
The deadly fits—and then Another rushed in for the dust!
—"Ballads of Lynn Lovell," by Arthur Guiterman.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

Y[illegible]s, "gone are the tales that once we read"—gone, like old Forgotten. For recent years have seen a revival of interest in the "Dime Novel Days" echoes of literature which has given the thing novel a place in respectable society that even its most ardent admirers—the juvenile attic, woodshed, or hayloft reading public of a bygone era—would never have believed possible.

What if one of the famous characters of the '50's did say, "The dime novel can't come back—it's dead as a door nail and nobody is willing to pay dollars for it." The fact is that the dime novel is gone from the pulps in most local in the form of numerous weekly, and in some instances even daily publications, but there are still a number of publishers, and there were also numerous sales. The little books were sent to the country stores, shipped on freight cars, wagon and stage loads, when the railroads arrived to shake the dust off and to distribute them quickly, so that they could be sure from the remotest corners within the Union and Confederate pickets, exchanged between the Potomac Bowels were to read, command. Thousands of men who had found pastime copies of dime novels found on their bunks on the battlefield and in the hospitals of soldiers who were buried with novels by their pockets.

For nearly 30 years the Beadle firm, under a variety of names representing changes in the partnership, dominated in the field of adult competition for the success of the dime novels immediately brought other publishers of this type of literature into the field—and when Frederick Leypoldt retired in 1880 it was with a comfortable fortune which the little books had built up for him. He died in 1884.

No less interesting than the publishers of those dime novels were the men who wrote them and Mr. Pearson is able here given a new revealing glimpses of those writers who lived some had

But if the mind of Mrs. Stephens, the author of the first dime novel, is all but forgotten there are two other names which are not and which are likely to be. One of them was a native of Maine who in 1860 was a school teacher in Texas. No. 2, Edward S. Ellis was his name and in that year for the sum of $75 he handed over to a publisher the story he had written at a log cabin home on the Nueces river in New Mexico. The publication of "The Captives of the Frontier." It was the first dime novel ever published and it marked a milestone in the history of literature.

But the other name is much more important for it is one which is synonymous with the name of dime novels. The man to whom we owe the invention was Orville J. Victor and incidentally, he was a newspaper man. Victor was editor of the Cincinnati Times, believed to be "responsible" when the war was over went to Mexico where he fought under Juarez. Then he became his secretary of state, and upon the fall of Juarez he returned to Cincinnati, where he became a writer of dime novels. Victor was the author of "Maum Guinea," "Malaeska, the Indian Wife of the Whaler," "Ruth Margerie," "Alice Wilde, the Raftsman's Daughter," "Seth Jones," "Irona, the Queen of the Quicksands," "Ned Wilder's Vow

SCHOOL NOTES

The foolish man sees happiness in the distance, the wise man grows it under his feet.

HISTORY DEPARTMENT

The class in Modern History has been changing in an original manner. In taking up the outlying possessions of England they have been giving map maps in class. This not only means a more definite picture in their minds, but, a more lasting one, we hope.

THE DEP CLUB

The Dep Club has been meeting each Thursday at 4:15, this year in their headquarters in to make our last Pep Meetings a big success, which they certainly have been, and to offer some real entertainment for the basketball fans during the lulses of big ball games.

At present, the Club is divided, the boys taking charge of the gym entertainment, while the girls sponsor the Pep Meetings. Slowly between the two sides they have filling high up, after our splendid Pep Meeting Friday morning and the cheer set in the high school auditorium, I think you'll have to call it a draw.

Wednesday evening Charlevoix's negative team, composed of Virginia Nickerson, Dorothy Staley and Marcia Manley, met Conway's affirmative team, composed of Miss Fisk, Miss McMillan and Gertrude Lyons, at the Conway high school. The judges of the debate were Mr. Rogers and Mr. Spotter of Petoskey, and Mr. Mc-Ginty of Mancelona. The decision was a unanimous one for Conway; therefore, Charlevoix is eliminated from the contest.

JUNIOR HIGH CIVICS

Students in the eighth grade have been studying "Civics". This course is to be made more real by the preparation of vocational booklets. These booklets permit each student to do some special learning for himself along the class within it are to be selected from books, magazines, and conversations; and then summarized in a theme of the student's own style.

ORAL REPORTS

Articles relating to current literary events quite a review by eighth graders since each Monday finds one half of each section prepared to report on some subject referring to current day affairs. As these reports are given before the class, the students concerned get worthwhile practice in speaking orally before a group.

JUNIOR HIGH BASKETBALL

The J. H. S. Basketball team will meet the East Jordan Juniors Friday evening at 8:00. One point proved to be the advantage in a previous game in a real battle is expected on the local floor.

SOCIAL SCIENCE

Miss Milner's seventh grade class has begun a class in Social Science. This is to be carried on in connection with the geography classes and is also related to the courses in history. At this age pupils have reached the stage where they are intensely interested in human beings not only as human beings, but also as authors and interpreters of social processes. Thus, historical studies centering upon notable men and women can have a strong influence.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Further news as to the success of the plan for studying the House of Representatives in Civics class is now available.

On Monday, February 23, 1931, the meeting was called to order by speaker Novak. Roll was taken by the clerk, David Coulter, and a quorum was announced present. Mr. Brown of Florida made a resolution that the Rules of the first congress be adopted for this congress.

Miss Lillian Mauk introduced the Bill, "An Act to Authorize the Appropriation for the Building New or Improving the Old Roads in Michigan." It was numbered "H. R.-1" and referred to the Appropriations committee. Mr. Glenn Heine made a motion that the House adjourn. It was seconded by Mr. Lee Shapton of Kansas and voted upon by the House. Ayes were 35 and nays were 0.

The bill was discussed by the Appropriation Committee and passed by this committee.

The following day the House was called to order by speaker Novak and roll taken. A quorum was not present because a number of Rebel one absent. Both Republicans and Democrats did not answer roll call. Sergeant-at-arms Neilson was sent by speaker Novak to recruit the missing members. At the next roll call, in spite of the continued silence from the Democratic quarters, a quorum announced present. Miss Lola Feasenden made a motion that those in the Democratic party be excused from the absence. Motion was seconded by Mr. McCall and passed by the House.

The House then took a committee of the whole with David Coulter presiding. The battle waged hot and heavy. The bill was discussed and put together again. Amendments were introduced by following Democrats, such as the appropriating of money to build dikes so that the water would not waste the shores of Florida, and passing a law that all inks be used for school purposes conform to the Perry Penn Law. The last amendment of the Bill concerning appropriations for air ports in Charlevoix, Boyne, Phelps, and Bay Shore was struck out after much argument.

Whether the bill is passed or not depends on Wednesday's session. There are twenty Republicans in the House who are for the bill, and if the Democrats and Socialists hang together there will be only eighteen against it. Regardless of the fate of Miss Manly's bill there has been a great deal of knowledge gleaned from this novel procedure, and some friendly rivalry and fun as well.

SEMESTER RESOLUTIONS

Resolved:

That Mr. North give no more problems to his Chemistry class.

That Mr. Coleman refuse to burden his English classes with more memory work no matter how persistently the students thereof may plead for it.

That Marion Smith and Stan Carrier refrain from walking to and from classes together.

That Angie Scott, Dorothy Struthers, and Marion Mc'ee hold no more Back Row Conventions during school hours.

That persons desiring to display artistic ability desist from using the Bulletin Board for an Art museum.

That Gertrude McCall and Bill Clark swear to leave all girls alone.

That Dave Coulter cease his role as a womenhater.

That Miss Anderson abolish standard tests in bookkeeping.

That Harry Goldstick takes vocal lessons.

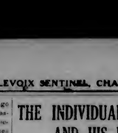
That Esther Brady will not smile for five minutes.

THE INDIVIDUAL AND HIS BANK

By ROME C. STEPHENSON

President American Bankers Association

BANKERS recognize that their business stems entirely from individuals and that their responsibilities and welcome all sound enterprises to add them meet the duties this imposes. Increasing efforts are being made to bring about continuously improving methods to facilitate and safeguard the business of individuals and to have them keep on a basis of all kinds of service.



R. C. STEPHENSON

Bankers are not the extremely people of the past year of business adversity, but have been ever since the founding of the years and have resulted in great progress along lines of better service to the methods. Although bankers along with all business has suffered reverses, conditions in this field have been far less severe than they would have been had not bankers been vigilant and careful in their endeavors to develop the best standards of banking that have generally prevail.

The American Bankers Association and kindred organizations in every state actively support the principle of continuous supervision by the banking men in charge. This not only means a more definite picture in their minds, but, a more lasting one, we hope.

GREAT STRIDES MADE IN NATION'S TELEPHONE SYSTEM IN PAST DECADE

Large Gain in Telephones and Extension of Service Are Notable Achievements

During the past decade few national industries have made great strides than has the Bell System in the ten years between 1920 and 1930 telephone has made gigantic advances. Perhaps the greatest development has been the extension of service, giving new and stronger vitality to words and speeding their exchange between one further.

So great has been the growth of the Bell System in the past ten years that it is possible to envision a development both in terms of days, hours and minutes. The number of individual telephones in use will over 19,000,000, which represents an increase of about 90 per cent since 1920. This means 3,500 an average of over 2,000 telephones connected each business every day for the past ten years, the daily gain has been being equivalent to the total daily in telephones for the entire state of Idaho or Nevada or Rhode Island or New Mexico. Ten years ago less than two per cent of the Bell system telephones in the world were connected to the automatic or dial type, whereas more than 50 per cent are served from dial system central offices.

Improvements and Extensions

To furnish adequate service to 19,500,000 Bell-owned telephones together with some 4,400,000 connected telephones, is a tremendous undertaking. It entails an average daily expenditure by the Bell System of approximately $2,400,000. The daily cost of operation has more than doubled since 1924. During the same period, in addition to this item of operation, an average of over $1,500,000 per day has been expended for gross construction, representing the improvements and extension of the existing telephone facilities to meet the ever growing demands of the public. As a result, in 1930 the Bell System plant reached a value of more than $4,000,000,000.

Increase of Wire in Cables

About 80 per cent of this more than $4,000,000,000 investment is represented by wires, cables and toll lines. The latter wire systems of Bell System wires now comprises some 15,000,000 miles, expressed by terms of wire mileage added each day in 1930, or enough to extend the distance between Los Angeles and New York more than 400 times. An enormous number of wires, giving new and stronger vitals to words and speeding their exchange between one another.

In 1920, about 85 per cent of the 20,000,000 miles of wire then in service was protected entirely from dangerous of overhead wire, leaving the part ten years 1930 Bell has risen to about 92 per cent, protected to the effort of the Bell System to furnish cutting high service of telephone service to its users under all sorts of conditions.

Over 40,000 Calls a Minute

By about two lines the number of the number since 1920, whereas during the past decade the increase was more than 100 per cent. Ten years ago less than one per cent of the Bell system telephones in the world were connected to the automatic or dial type, whereas more than 50 per cent are served from dial system central offices.

FIRE DAMAGES RESIDENCE

SUNDAY A. M. BLAZE WRECKS ROOF OF HOME HOME

Fire department members were called to the residence of Robert Howe, located on Petoskey avenue, at an early hour Sunday morning where they were engaged with their equipment for some time before they conquered the blaze and then only after some heavy damages had resulted.

Evidently the fire started in the roof of the residence, burned rapidly and before the fire was under control had wrecked the upper part of the house and to some extent more or less damaged the entire structure causing a financial loss of approximately $1,500, according to estimates made by contractors and others interested in building operations.

Charles Marshall, in charge of the chemical truck, met with a serious mishap when a portion of the roof collapsed and was considerably cut about his face and head by breaking glass. Several stitches were taken in order to close the wounds. These are healing nicely with every prospect of speedy recovery from the injuries sustained.

The loss on the building was fully covered by insurance which, after adjustment of the loss has been made, will be turned over to Mr. Howe. The insurance policy was written by a local agency (Charlevoix Abstract & Engineering Company) through which a prompt adjustment of the loss will be made.

STATE CONVENTION AT KALAMAZOO

FIVE CHARLEVOIX COUNTY DELEGATES TO ATTEND

Kalamazoo is the mecca for many republicans from all over Michigan this week, some of whom are traveling toward that city today where they will join those already there and be ready to greet later arrivals.

The Republican State Convention, scheduled for Friday, March 6 is the magnet and drawing card for the big meeting.

Charlevoix, under the state call is entitled to five delegates at the Republican gathering. These were elected at a convention recently held at Boyne City. In that town Boyne City residents, ten Charlevoix residents and one from East Jordan were chosen to represent the county at the state convention in Kalamazoo.

Charlevoix's Mrs Maud Armstrong and Dr. F. F. McMillan; East Jordan, Howard F. Porter; Boyne City, Reed Scott and William P. Vought.

SHIPS ANCHOR BIRDS TO WATER WITH OIL

New York—Steamships, after the sweeping of "winged" sailing craft from the seas, have advanced another step and are taking huge toll of all winged creatures of the waters, the U. S. Biological Survey has informed the American Game Association.

"Great flocks of ducks, geese, divers, gulls and terns die in winter when their feathers become soaked with oil pumped into the water, in evasion of a federal law, by oil-burning ships and oil tankers," the survey reported. "The birds, unable to fly, die of the cold or hunger or are needlessly drowned."

RESERVES LOSE 9-4, AND JUNIOR HIGH LOSES 7-3

Last Friday evening the local High School basketball team flashed its best form and piled and downed the East Jordan team by a 23-12 score. The locals had apparently recovered from the slump that hit them when they last played Harbor Springs, and they seem to be a better team than they were before it happened.

The regular five men started the game, Novak and V. Smith at guard, Jones at center, and McCall and McNasby at forward. Later in the game Acritis replaced V. Smith and J. Smith took McNasby's place.

Aure led the scoring with 9 points, while Novak had 5, McCall 4, J. Smith 3, and V. Smith 2. McNasby, Acritis and all the others, for that matter, played good on defense.

The Reserves lost the preliminary to the East Jordan second team by a score of 9-4. The Reserves showed flashes but to the Jordan juniors by a 7-3 score.

The first team seems to be in good shape for the Tournament to be held at Boyne City on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week.

Charlevoix drew East Jordan in the first round, and with two victories already over this team, it looks like a third will soon be had, too. The winner draws a bye in the semi-finals, Harbor Springs drew Mancelona in the first round and Boyne City a bye. Boyne will probably play Harbor in the semi-final and the winner should earn a hard time with Charlevoix in the final. The first, and perhaps the second place winner will go to the Petoskey the following week to participate in the Regional Tournament. We expect the winner at Boyne City to have an easy time at Petoskey, as to the state tournament without any trouble.

The Class B teams at Boyne City will be Petoskey, Cadillac, Boyne City, Central Lake, Ellsworth, Bellaire, and Boyne Falls. Pellston, the probable winner, drew Ellsworth in the first round, and it looks like a good game.

Ladies of St. Mary Church announce the annual St Patrick's supper for Tuesday, March 17th at 6:30 p. m. This will be served at the church. Everyone invited. Price: Adults 75c; Children, 50c.

MAIL CONTRACT HAS BEEN AWARDED

GOES TO BOYNE CITY BIDDER

Captain James H. Gallagher of Boyne City was recently awarded the contract for carrying the mail, during the season of navigation, over the Charlevoix—St. James route.

According to reports Captain Gallagher contemplates placing a steel ship in the service and of a much larger size and carrying capacity than those on the route in past years.

Captain Gallagher is a man of long experience not only in local waters but on the entire Great Lakes chain as well. He is widely known as a careful, capable navigator, such an one as the public have implicit confidence in both his judgment and ability to bring his ship safely into port, regardless of weather conditions, he drew fair or foul.

METHODIST BASKETEERS WIN ANOTHER VICTORY

Last Saturday the local Methodist Sunday School basketball team was victorious over the Christian Church team from Petoskey by the score of 6-4. The Petoskey boys were much larger, but the locals were faster and handled the ball better.

On the same day the local Baptist boys engaged in a game with the Petoskey Baptists, but being unused to the Petoskey floor, on which the game was played, they lost by a score of 14 to 8.

The Congregational boys won by Reserves, this evening the season's score of 10 to 2 from the Methodist count.

CONSERVATION DEPT. REPORT

CONVICTIONS RESULTING FROM LAW VIOLATIONS

The total number of convictions for violation of the state game laws for January totaled 201. Fines collected amounted to $5,226.95 and in addition jail sentences aggregating 1,030 days were pronounced on offenders.

Lansing, Mar. 4—Despite arguments to the contrary, Houghton Lake is recognized officially as the largest inland lake in Michigan its area of 30.8 square miles is not closely approached by any of the larger lakes of the state.

A report on the inland lakes of Michigan prepared by I. D. Scott for the Geological Survey Division of the Department of Conservation shows relative areas of the larger upper and lower peninsula lakes. Torch Lake ranks second in size in the state with an area of 18.2 square miles. Mullet Lake is third with 16.8 square miles and Charlevoix (Pine) Lake, fourth with 16.7 square miles. Burt Lake is fifth in size with an area of 16.5 square miles.

Lansing, Mar. 4—A fall of snow in Mason County proved unfortunate for A. B. Davis, Walhalla, and Charles Landon, Branch, Conservation Officer Frank Kennedy received a report that a deer had been killed at a certain location.

He found the report and then followed tracks through the snow of the town leading away through the fields to the farm of A. J. Duels. Knowing went back, got a search warrant and returned.

As he was entering the farm yard he stopped a car coming out. He found a quarter of a deer under a seat. The car was driven by Landon. At the farm he found another box of venison. Davis and Landon each paid fines and costs amounting to $56.25.

Lansing, Mar. 4—A year and a half after their arrest for killing wild ducks, four Algonac and St. Clair men have been convicted and sentenced.

The men are, Valley Lohman, Algonac, who paid a fine of $150 and costs totaling $61.50; Cecil Moore, Mr. Clemens, who paid a fine of $100 and was given a jail term of 30 days; George Dalgleish, Algonac, who was fined $50, and Lawrence Moore who was placed on a two years' suspended sentence. The men were tried and sentenced in the Eastern District Federal court.

The convictions followed investigations made in 1929 by E. C. McDonough, conservation officer in St. Clair County, and Marquis A. Charlton, U. S. Game Protector.

Lohman was charged with selling 20 wild ducks; Martin and Douglass with selling 30 wild ducks mfall0 1, with selling two, and Moore with selling three ducks.

C. W. PALMER IS RE-ELECTED

RETAINS POSITION AS COUNTY COMMISSIONER OF SCHOOLS

W. C. Palmer continues as School Commissioner of Charlevoix County for the following four year period.

This was the decision made by a majority of the electors who visited the polls Monday and cast their votes.

Two candidates made up the field, Mr. Palmer and Mr. Archie C. Belding. The former the present commissioner and the latter at one time holder of the same official position.

Throughout the campaign it was generally conceded that the race would be close. It was. At the same time Mr. Palmer, the present incumbent was considered as having more than a 50-50 break in the contest. Final results show that he did win, but by a majority of approximately 125 votes.

NOVAK PICKED BY JOHN FERENZ

TRAVERSE REFEREE PICKS THE OUTSTANDING PLAYERS

John Ferenz, the Traverse City referee who has handled many basketball games in the "Little Six", has picked a team of outstanding players in an article in Monday's "Record-Eagle."

He says there are many good players, but he has nevertheless picked eleven whom he believes are best. He mentions three local players, Novak, Aure and McCall, also Booth, Bradley, and Hill of Harbor Springs; Rouse and White of Boyne City; Nisbit and Sisson of Gaylord; and Summerville of Mancelona.

He gives credit to all the coaches, and mentions the fact that the Little Six teams won all the games scheduled with the Big Six teams.

He finally picks out as the outstanding players, Novak of Charlevoix, Bradley of Harbor Springs, and Rouse of Boyne City, in the order named.

He says "these men were the outstanding players in the north."

LEGION MEMBERS, BUSINESS MEN WILL VISIT LEGION POST AT TRAVERSE CITY

Members of Leslie T. Shapton Post American Legion recently received an invitation to attend a meeting, join in a potluck supper and entertainment sponsored by the Traverse City Legion members.

The get-together, good-time meeting is scheduled for Tuesday evening, March 10th at 7:00 o'clock. A large number of American Legion boys from Charlevoix will make the trip accompanied by several local business men.

Automobiles will be the method used for transportation. These have been provided and in numbers sufficient for all to make the trip in comfort. Present plans for starting from Charlevoix places the time at 5:30 p. m. at which time automobiles will take on their passengers at Legion headquarters.

FARM ACCOUNT RECORDS ARE BEING CLOSED THIS WEEK

Mr. H. A. Berg, in charge of Farm Management Extension Work of the Michigan State College, is in the County this week inspecting the farm records of some 58 different farmers who have kept accurate farm records during the past year. This work is gaining in popularity each year and for the new year starting March 1st over fifty farmers in the County will know more about their farm situation. Two years ago 26 records were completed for the year, last year 78, and for the new year I believe there will be at least 45.

This project is carried on in a real businesslike manner. The work is first carefully outlined, secondly each cooperator is visited on his own farm once during the year by Mr Berg, and thirdly each book is carefully checked when closed. This means that our farms are placed on the same uniform basis and therefore the comparisons between farms are on the same scale.

It is not too late for farmers who would like to keep farm records to do so, to enroll for the year. While March 1st is the opening date, during any time within two or three weeks of that date the records can be accurately placed in the book. Phone or write your County Agent if interested.

Yours very truly,
R. C. Mellencamp,
County Agricultural Agent

TALK ABOUT CELEBRATING

MICHIGAN'S ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY

If the lawmakers of Michigan decide upon 1935 as the year for celebrating the state's hundredth birthday, this will not be the only big, lavish anniversary of significance to be observed in the state that year. Another will be the centennial of the famous "Toledo War," when Michigan, then still a territory, resorted to arms to defend what it conceived to be its right to 468 square miles of rich farm land and a thriving and stragetically-located city on its southern boundary, claimed by Ohio.

The "Toledo War" is described by Chester Dorman Kelly, in an article, "When Michigan Fought Ohio," in The Magazine of Michigan. (Fenton) say issues in part as follows:

"As a territory containing less than 30,000 people Michigan dared to oppose the third most populous state in the Union," says the article. "Toledo, the center of this storm, had long been considered by Michigan's adversary, the powerful state of Ohio, as the outlet into Lake Erie of the extensive grain, canals and inland waterways. At this period water was the principal medium of transportation. The importance of Toledo was further enhanced by the fact that it represented at the time the most logical western terminus of Lake Erie and an important gateway to the rapidly developing country farther west.

"These rival claims, after smouldering for so long, suddenly flamed up into a serious boundary dispute. The contestants prepared for war and on Michigan's part at least, excitement rose to fever pitch."

The expected battles never took place, however, and according to the article, the only blood shed was that of two horses, one on each side.

"Michigan lost Toledo," the writer continues, "and gained what is now known as the Upper Peninsula. In 1835, this seemed like humiliating defeat, and yet the passing of the years has proved it the greatest piece of good fortune, with respect to acquisition of territory, that any State in the Union ever had forced upon it.

"Thus Michigan entered the Union after a stormy period of assertions, demands and threats and a short but dangerous notice on the 'battle field' and it is indeed fortunate that an can look back upon the first 'civil war' in the United States and smile."

MASONS WINNERS IN PLAY MONDAY

BY MARGIN OF SEVENTY-SIX POINTS

Cribbage players, I. O. O. F. and F. & A. M. met for their sixth game of cribbage Monday night. Thirty tables were engaged during the session. Final results, according to tallications made at the close of the session gave F. & A. M. players 21,607 points and I. O. O. F. players 21,531 and for the play the evening a lead of 76 points.

High scorer for the I. O. O. F. went to Gordon Kirby who was credited with 902, while H. R. Fowler with 844 was high man for the Masons.

Two more games will complete the series of eight games arranged for the contest and the two remaining games are looked forward to with unusual interest.

The first five games were taken consecutively by I. O. O. F. contestants, nearly all of which were by heavy majorities, as a result the Masons are hundreds and some hundreds of points below their competitors. In fact the I. O. O. F. players have piled such an enormous lead that there is little, if any, chance to win the series by F. & A. M. contenders. However the gathering of luck on that mildly Monday night and there is yet time for the Masons to forge to the front in which case it would spell bad luck for the Oddfellows and the highest degree of good fortune for the Masons.

In the meantime the splendid trophy awaits the final decision, before being turned over to the winners.

POLAR BEARS, CUBS BOTH WIN

DAVENPORT LEADS SCORING WITH SIXTEEN POINTS

By Harold Nyswonger

The Polar Bears and their smaller cousins, the Cubs, both were going strong last night when they met opponents in a walkaway. In behalf of the Traverse City Athletics, when the Davenport Cubs, the Polar Bears' smaller cousins, were defeated by a score of 26 to 9, and the Polar Bears' superior cousins were on hand to make it two out of two in the last round and there was nothing for Traverse to do but to make the best of a sad beating. The Cubs had a good lead all the way in their game with the Petoskey Juniors All-Stars, but in the last quarter they got careless and Petoskey began to run a few points. The final score of the preliminary was 26 to 16.

In the main game Hamilton, Big Bear Booth, Cooper and Kipke started for Charlevoix, and Davenport and Jones were later substituted for the Cubs. Davenport was high man for the night with 16 points, while Wagner and Thelen each made 4 and Simpson followed with 2. Smith also played a snappy game, but failed to score.

The Polar Bears will have one more home game this year, with the Flint Team which was mentioned here some time ago. The game between the Bearcats and their dads of two months. There are also rumorings to enter the Interscholastic Basketball Tournament at Grand Rapids this month, and they expect that when they enter they will not suffe for the champions of

PETOSKEY BANK ROBBED SATURDAY

SOME FUNDS TAKEN SATURDAY NIGHT—MAN CAPTURED

A young man by the name of Cecil Robinett, a resident of Vanderbilt, attempted to rob the First National Bank at Petoskey Saturday night, when he appeared, pistol in hand and made a demand for funds. He secured some money, the bank says $7,015, made a speedy get away but was taken the following day at Vanderbilt and $926 recovered. This is the amount Bristnell claims as confidence he have taken with him from the bank at the time of his raid—and not $1,016 as reported by bank employees.

Bristnell was taken from the place where the arrest was made and locked up in the Emmet County jail, where, unless bond is provided he will be held until his case is disposed of by the court.

Following the hold up excitement was high in Petoskey, Local and state police were on the job early, followed many rapidly and a few hours later placed the holdup man in a cell.

What a set of punishment most of us would be compelled to take if we had to take what was justly our due.

Northern Michigan, but of the entire state.

Due to the inability of the Traverse City team to get the use of the Traverse gym last Saturday the game which was to have been played there was postponed indefinitely.

He Lost a Battle and Won a Campaign

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

1776 points marked the anniversary of the capture of Gamecock Thomas Sumter in North Carolina. Francis had left Sumter ago—on March 15, 1781. Cornwallis started to retire southward in the Revolution. This time to his first British ground he spent in Americans. The fearless whipped more men than ever, it was his last victory before at Washington's appeal at Trenton, Washington's appeal at Trenton, Washington's appeal at Trenton, Princeton, Brandywine, Germantown, Monmouth, Saratoga, Camden, Guilford Court House, Eutaw Springs, Yorktown, and Trenton.

The task which was given him in 1780 was one which would have terrified any commander. Sir Henry Clinton had captured Charleston, S. C., and Lincoln's army of 5,000 men. The British had overrun Georgia and South Carolina and with the brilliant Lord Cornwallis to command it seemed as though all the South had been won for Great Britain. Congress and even General Gates, the conqueror of Burgoyne, considered the victor at Saratoga, to take charge of what patriot forces there were available there and although Gates had refused to serve under Lincoln sent a division of Continental troops under Baron de Kalb to help fight while the title of British success. As for Gates, "the Northern laurels turned to Southern willows," and he suffered a disastrous defeat at the battle of Camden, which was all the more tragic because of the loss of De Kalb.

Following his success at Charleston, Cornwallis proceeded with the invasion of North Carolina. The defeat of Ferguson at Kings Mountain on October 7, 1780, with its loss of 1,000 of Cornwallis' best men checked him temporarily and he fell back to Winnsboro. But this lightened for only a moment the gloom which seemed to be settling down over the patriot cause. The outlook was still dark enough when Greene arrived in Charlotte, N. C., early in December. Washington had given him his second in command, Baron Steuben, and he also had also Daniel Morgan, the old hero of Saratoga, Jack Eutaw and "Light Horse Harry" Lee. Upon taking command Greene immediately was the conference of Gen. William Washington, a brilliant cavalry leader, and the famous partisan leaders, Marion, Pickens and Sumter.

The total force at Greene's disposal was probably never much over 2,000. With not few hundred Continentals and the unreliable militia whose numbers fluctuated constantly, he knew that he could not risk a pitched battle with Cornwallis. His only hope was to carry on the partisan warfare of the Carolina leaders on a larger scale, to divided his army for that purpose, sending Morgan with about 600 men to the westward, with Sumter on Cornwallis' left flank and giving him orders to threaten the British leader's line of communications with Georgia. Greene took the rest to Augusta in Georgia. Greene took then, hear Huger with him in an advance on the city of the Peiree to threaten Georgetown and Cornwallis communications with Charleston.

On the flow of it, this was poor strategy but unexpected events proved the wisdom of Greene's decision. The instant thing for Cornwallis to do was to try to defeat the American forces in detail and Greene's division of his forces seems to offer the opportunity. But the new American commander had the Briton worried from the start. Sir Cornwallis had no illusions about Greene. "He is as dangerous as Washington," he wrote a friend. If he moved forward against Greene, Morgan would fall upon his rear. If he turned to crush Morgan, Greene would pounce down upon him from behind. He could not leave Carolina and his rear unless of supplies unprotected. So it will be seen that Greene had "put him to a hole" at the outset.

Cornwallis' final decision was to follow Greene's example and divide his forces which was bad for the Americans commander began planning "rallies and events aboard." He sent his chief engineer, Rochambeau, and his quartermaster Carrington, to establish the forts of the various rivers of North Carolina and to gather badly needed supplies at strategic points. Then he proceeded to follow Morgan's every step, not only with his army, but also with the British fleet.

Cornwallis' first move was to send one of his best officers, Lieutenant Tarleton, to attack Morgan. The result was the battle of Cowpens on January 17, 1781. In which Morgan won a complete and brilliant victory. Cornwallis immediately set out to punish Morgan for that stroke, although encumbered with prisoners and the booty of supplies captured at Cowpens, retreated so rapidly that within a week he had recovered nearly 50 miles and put the Catawba between the two armies.

Greene on January 30 received information that Cornwallis was about to cross the Catawba at Trading Ford. He ordered his army to march for the crossing over, sustained the militia which Greene had left there to cover his crossing and set out after Greene. The next day Greene reached the Yadkin, which was also swollen by rains, but Harrington was there with his boats and the fit the force of Americans was quickly on that account. The last boats were leaving for the north shore when the British advance guard came into view. Having no boats, Cornwallis was forced to seek shallower fords 25 miles up the Yadkin. He then hurried toward the upper fords on the line ready in the hope of reaching them before Greene could. But again Greene's forced march proved its value. He had boats waiting for him on the north shore and he crossed over in time.

Greene's plan had worked perfectly. By keeping just in front of Cornwallis he had ordered him northward nearly 200 miles away from his base of supplies at Charleston and at the same time had brought his own troops nearer to Suddath, who was assembling reinforcements in Virginia.

It had been a thrilling race, across the Catawba, across the Yadkin and across the Dan. Both armies were almost worn out by this unprecedented march, but Cornwallis was in much worse condition than Greene. He had lost about 250 men, and by now he was feeling keenly the lack of the supplies which he had burned at Ramsour's Mills.

Greene now consulted himself with the remark that he had forced the enemy out of the Carolinas. But it was an empty boast for the enemy couldn't stay there long. Now was the time Greene started on his return then Greene recrossed the Dan. On February 23 he had joined by the rest of his army under Huger and at Guilford Court House, an event which was especially pleasing to Greene's battle. The British leader was perfectly willing to accept the challenge, since it offered the possibility of restoring some of the prestige he had lost in being outmaneuvered by Greene during the famous retreat.

Greene posted his troops in three lines, following the tactics which Morgan had successfully used at Cowpens. The North Carolina militia were in front with parties of expert riflemen on either flank. Three hundred yards behind them was a line of Virginia militia with Colonel William Washington's cavalry on their right flank and Lieutenant Colonel Otho Williams' Maryland and Delaware Continentals on the left. Still farther back, on a hill, were the Continentals under Huger and Colonel John Eager Howard.

Cornwallis' army was in two columns, the British regulars under Lieutenant General Alexander Leslie, and the Hessians under Lieutenant General Baron von Wurmb. Leslie's men were in front and Cornwallis, with the Hessians, was in the rear. Tarleton's cavalry was on the left. The first and third lines were on the edge of clearings, giving a good field of fire, but the second was in the woods.

All told Greene had about 4,000 men, but a large part of these were militia, some not armed under fire and given to sudden panics. Cornwallis had about 2,000 men, British and Hessians, well versed in all of them were well-trained and Baron Cornwallis attacked about noon. Greene's first line, behind fences on the front advanced for the attack. Sniper firing ran soon and with opportunity he was offered. Then when the British line charged the line broke and the militia fled in disorder. The second line stood its ground bravely and the British pursued it. But Americans in opposite directions which the nature of the situation at the time made necessary. Cornwallis managed to reform his lines and prepared for a final assault.

The Virginia Continentals up to now had not been fully engaged and Greene rightly held them there in all this confusion, troubled Cornwallis and it was the day. But those Continentals were not the veterans that the Maryland troops were and they could have been pushed against some of the best troops in the British army, was victory almost within their grasp. If the Virginians failed it might result in the destruction of Greene's whole army. We can never know how nearly they did. The British attack was fierce and was then to gather such fire, to scatter everything on one front and to try the issue in the bayonet and the hand to hand struggle that followed their one opinion was at stake there. If he pressed, victory and the fruits of victory were his and perhaps the whole patriot cause was lost. So he gave the order to retreat and ordered from the field to good order. That retreat at the critical hour of that self-imbedded battle was much more heroic and overlooked more courage and skill than anything else he could have done," says Hendrick.

Cornwallis had won, but he had paid dearly in defeating Greene at Guilford he had simply whittled off his own force. As Fox, the British statesman remarked when he heard the news of the battle, "A few more victories like that and we are undone." His forces was still in the field with an army better and still able to fight. Cornwallis had no choice but to abandon his advance position so far from his base. If he retired to Cheraw, he was admitting the defeat of his whole campaign. If he went on Wilmington, where a base had been prepared for him, he could tell his story and perhaps destroy his enemy if Greene should follow him. In any case he could go North into Virginia and there perhaps wage a decisive campaign. So to Wilmington he went.

Greene followed Cornwallis until his objective became certain, then swung around southward to attempt an even more difficult task—that of defeating Lord Rawdon, who had a force at Camden, and General Francis Marion on the Santee. The history of Greene's campaign in South Carolina is in the main a repetition of that in North Carolina. He took battles—the battle of Hobkirk's Hill in April, 1781, the siege of Ninety Six in May and June, and the battle of Eutaw Springs in September, all again he was the commander. For General Nathaniel Greene's successful retreat into Virginia after his deeply victory at Eutaw Springs and from that time on the Americans were pretty much the masters of the situation in both the Carolinas. Cornwallis had gone to Virginia where the demolition of war reached at Yorktown awaited him.

And if any final word be needed to crown the fame of this indomitable general, who could lose battles and yet win campaigns, it may be found in a letter which he wrote in a moment of defeat. Thus after Hobkirk's Hill: "We fight, get beat, rise, and fight again."

Frenchman's Claim to Be "Father" of Films

Nobody quite knows who was the originator of the cinematograph, and there are several claimants for the honor. The Americans say that Edison was the first of the film experts, there is no doubt that a Frenchman named Louis Aime Augustin le Prince actually produced films over a year before Edison. His widow at Leeds has brought to the light of day a strip of paper which she says contains the first film ever made. The paper is yellowed and the film is very faint, but there is no doubt that a group of people are shown moving in the garden of Le Prince's house at Leeds.

Le Prince was a huge man. He stood six feet four inches and was proud of his physique. He came to this country as a young man, and at Leeds in 1888 he photographed persons with a movable camera and later made a projector. His invention attracted some considerable attention, though he was never able to exploit it commercially, for he came to an untimely end mysteriously on the September 16, 1890. He boarded a Paris train at Dijon and was never seen again. His widow always believed he was murdered for his plans and that he was "dropped off" by an unscrupulous gang into the Seine, where he was drowned. He was certainly embarrassed. In their last days they were very hard up, and when he threw his camera into the river

Castoria made especially for CHILDREN

CHILDREN usually hate to take medicine but every child loves the taste of Castoria. And mothers like its action—so gentle, yet so prompt and effective.

Castoria is a never failing comfort to children and mothers alike because it was formulated especially for children—to correct their little ills and upsets.

The beauty of it is you can give Castoria to children of all ages with equally sure results. When baby's cry, wants of colic, a few drops of Castoria has him soothed, and free from pain, he is asleep again in a jiffy.

In an older child when coated tongue or bad breath tell of constipation, a more liberal dose is usually all that is needed to cleanse and regulate the bowels.

Your doctor will tell you Castoria deserves a place in the family medicine cabinet until your children are grown. He knows it is safe for the tiniest baby, healthy or sick child in its home.

How to Escape FLU

1 Avoid so far as possible the places where flu germs are most likely to be spread; overcrowded cars and public meeting places; overheated, stuffy rooms.

2 Be careful of close contact with others and beware of all coughers and sneezers; breathe through the nose, get fresh air, but avoid drafts or chilling.

3 Get lots of rest. Eat plenty of citrus fruits. Keep the bowels open. Take extra precaution to keep in good physical condition, so your system will have high resistance against germs.

4 Above all, avoid catching colds. They lower your resistance to the flu germ. Ward them off. At the first sign of any cold, take Bayer Aspirin and remain indoors if possible until your cold is gone. If you have a sore throat, dissolve some Bayer Aspirin tablets in water and gargle; this will relieve the soreness and reduce the inflammation.

5 If you have any reason to suspect even a touch of flu, call your doctor at once.

DECLAMATIONS

The past two weeks have been spent on declamations in preparation for the final contest March 5th. The freshman class have, as yet, not chosen their representatives. Practice contests have been completed in the Sophomore class, leaving Winifred Temple, Hazel Arnold, Dorothy Pederson, Dorothy Staley, Elizabeth Thacker, John Winder, and Lila Tillotson to continue for further eliminations.

C. H. S. has trained out many excellent speakers. Besides the above mentioned, others who receive honorable mention are:

Sophomores: John Shetler, Margaret Newman, Irene Gilbert, Dorothy Bailey, Gertrude Clark, Marion Tyler, Margaret McCann, Marjorie Newman, Irene Gilbert, Dorothy Bailey, Herbert Campbell, Olive Rader, Opal Yeomans, Helen Chaddock, Jane Steiner, and Virginia Taylor.

Thursday afternoon at 3:15 the local declamatory contest will be held to choose a representative to the Northern Michigan contest. Roy Sanders, Rex Lockard, and Kay Sweet will act as judges. Musical selections will be presented by Miss French and Mrs. McKee.

The students have shown great interest in this work and invite the public to attend their contests.

Civics

In preparation for the future duty as the methods of election, the civics class appointed Bob McCall and Walter Sandford to attend the primary election of this city Monday. They obtained useful information which will be of much use to them when they handle this phase of their study.

The Boyhood of Famous Americans

By Fitzgerald

James A. Farrell

While father John was not easy for boys to get into years ago, A youngster had to take what was offered him and at a small wage, too. If he worked long hours and he generally did what the boss of today would consider a sub's work. James A. Farrell was no different from the rest of his work-ing boys of the fifties.

He wasn't quite sixteen when he had to go to work. His father lost his life at sea and the boy's earnings were needed at home. He was lucky for his age he had no trouble getting a job as a laborer in the place of the New Haven Wire company. He was paid $4.00 a week for twelve hours since of back-breaking work.

Such a life didn't fit in with the plans young Farrell had made when he was attending grammar school in New Haven. Home he was born in 1863 the 16th of the 5th a ship owner who skippered his own craft. His father was a comfortable circumstances. He intended on giving his son the benefit of a college education.

But the older Farrell met with reverses and went down at sea with his ship before he was able to get his son started in life with the advantages of a higher education. The youngster didn't grieve over his changed circumstances. He went to work and got a job. He couldn't have found a much better one. With only enough boy and good health he was able to hold his own with the grown men with whom he worked. Proof as he was when he returned home at night he studied and read good books. He wasn't going to be cheated of an education even if he did have to work as a day laborer.

He showed progress in his work. this he became a molder when he was seventeen years old. Here again he showed an ability to study hard and intelligently. By the time he was nineteen he was a foreman over the workmen any earning $30 a week.

As a boy he had made several engagements with his fiddle. Those trips aroused his interest in navigating. He explored over the hulls of the many vessels when he studied at night and at a good day in the mills the would-be navigator his self-taught lessons and long after the mills had closed down for the night Ring in the important cities rivers sometimes and sometimes.

In this way he cultivated a memory that was to serve him in good stead later in life. His associates say that he never forgot a detail so important could that he once like was in his head. Rarely is there one who can do this and fail off first and figures without having to refer to books or notes.

The boy found it hard to find to cultivate a good memory, for he was dissatisfied at the pike to remember facts he thought he might need. Soon the facts came easy to him.

He had been given a regular when he was a little before. He swapped marbles, jackknives and other treasures of childhood with playmates. He seldom got the worst of a deal He had the friendship of a good salesman before he entered the wood business as a lad of fifteen.

It was natural enough that he turn to salesmanship after he learned the lessons and lessons Upon the ground up. When the chance came to sell coal profits he made a notable record. He wasn't the best fellow-well, just type a stove and a hard shaper. But he was an excellent salesman. He later to gain the title of America's greatest salesman of coal.

The future head of the United States Steel corporation had a long and hard row to hoe before he reached the goal now and fulfill the promise of his amazing start. It was a matter of some nine years' work in New Haven for with the knowledge he had made up his mind to leave all there was to know about the coal business. He was convinced that Pittsburgh, the seat of the industry, held an opportunity for him.

Future events proved the wisdom of his choice. He was soon assistant superintendent of a mill after having worked in the white hot heat of the blast furnaces and rolled bars to the waist, in the rolling plant. He was promoted to the superintendency and later was made general manager. He was traveling fast to make good and not forgetting a thing he had learned in the past.

His romantic finality put him in charge of sales for the United States with headquarters in New York. He was so successful that the steel corporation placed him in the hands of Europe in charge of sales. Here his knowledge of foreign conditions, that had its beginning in his study of foreign geography as a boy, helped him to establish a new record.

That success brought the boy who started as a laborer at $4.00 a week the presidency of the Steel corporation, one of the world's greatest industrial positions.

Mastiffs More Than Match for Lion

New York—The mastiff probably is the oldest of the Newfoundland dogs, his remotest unchanged in form, size and colors for hundreds of years, and always he has been famed for his courage.

He is written that the Romans fought the mastiff to fathom and, to this end they sent him to Britain to fight against other great and ferocious beasts. Every Roman lived to see the mastiff fight against some of the fiercest, and according to Caesar, successful beasts.

As to the exports of the English mastiff, one writer relates an instance of a contest between three mastiffs and a lion in the presence of Nero. The lion suffered not a wound, but the three mastiffs were left for dead. Of the two brought off the field of battle, which at that time had reduced to one, though the younger lion were often galled by his authority it was easier on the whole to submit, to meet each three to resist and have a rich. It is the many point of view which we call intelligence assistance in my more important relationships. We are pleased by the arrogance of those who exercise authority over us, but we say little about it.

Has George's authority was for the most being exercised in a kindly way, going off for six weeks to a summer camp, and Fred's was to see that he got to the finish, and among the way with experiences in the old town. Fred turned to his mother and in connection with a spirit of misunderstanding.

"Well, mother, it's a good relief to be rid of George. With George gone the quarrels for power were to have fewer battlefields.

It is strange how many people want to be chairmen of the committee, or president of the Rotary club, or lord of this or that, and all because the position gives them some prominence or authority. There is never an occasion that some one is not eager to fill.

I had two letters in this morning's mail from members of an organization in which I belong. Each one wants to be national president of the organization, and they want to circulate my personal literature, and enclosing a self-addressed envelope to bring about that result. It is the thing for anybody the desire for power is to be sought after, and they are quite willing to spend time and money to reach that end.

Desire for Power

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

George, who was twelve, was the oldest of the five Van Dam Berg children and made the most of his position as the oldest in his nursery age and experience as a result he was the right to be the boss. Fred, who was eight, tolerated this boss with considerable grace, but he was not always willing to submit to the authority of his brother. Two days were to be spent in the country with Uncle Ben, and there were decisions to be made: there are embarrassing situations to be met by those who have executive position and power, and it is these things rather than the honor attached which has always seemed to me to be the most valuable compensation for the possession of power or authority. The cases you which have known do not know but much openly to the authority. They do not realize that power is sometimes the most difficult thing in the property

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

From Manhattan, amateur theatrical circles report, has now returned to the old stamping ground. He arrived from a trip around the world by sailing from New York to Genoa and from there to the capital. Mr. Zimbalist was anxious most interested in Japan, where he played exceptionally well. Beethoven and Bach accompanied by a Japanese orchestra. He says the Japanese are fine musicians, that they know all about western music, and that they have educated them-selves in that knowledge to the point of very high.

He says also he thought the most beautiful scene for his wife to watch was Fujiyama, the sacred mountain of Japan. He thought the most interesting place he visited was Angkor, Cambodia, a city with ruins that rivals the most stupendous ruins of the world was to be found in that country.

Yours said Mr Zimbalist, "the experiences of the trip around the world are manifold. Possibly the most interesting was the one I had in Japan. I have been there several times and have seen the cherry trees in bloom. Each of however, there is always something new to see. Some of the most interesting things I saw were the Japanese wrestlers. They are the most powerful men I have ever seen. They are built somewhat like bulls, and I believe that if one of them were to get angry he could kill a man with his bare hands. I would not undertake to underestimate him. I found it hard to get a wrestler to consent to wrestle with me, but I finally succeeded in getting one to do so. I was built like the Notre Dame. Fine-looking fellow.

"Well, the bout concluded." I don't think he would ever make all-American.

Hayden of New York stores who make fairly frequent trips to Europe are making up for lost good times they have had in several years. They say that Europe is pretty well "played out" as a market." Foreign manufacturers are overstocked and willing to listen to reason. Where the United States was riding the crest of general prosperity and affluence, Paris merchants could get about any price they had the nerve to ask. Now they are looking for custom.

COLOSSAL PROFITS OF CHICAGO'S BEER RING

The colossal profits of Chicago's beer ring were just made public in a sworn report given by Colonel Robert Isham Randolph, president of the Chicago Association of Commerce. The president of this notorious traffic even gathered for Colonel Randolph by a group of trained investigators, and their authenticity is certified by the auditing staff of the business men who sponsored the anti-committee in charge of the work.

The profits of saloons and speakeasies in Chicago is set at 70,000 bbls. and 100,000 barrels of beer annually, which means that the average Chicagoan consumes nearly a pint a day. It costs the beer syndicate $3.00 to brew a barrel of beer and there are additional manufacturing costs which bring the total to $4 a barrel. It leaves the brewery. The standard price charged the speakeasies is $10 a barrel, leaving a gross profit on $40,000,000 barrels on beer alone, or total gross profit to the beer ring of $36,000,000. Of this Colonel Randolph estimates that only a little $10,000,000 is set aside every year to pay for police protection and the corrupting of politicians and law enforcers.

And this gang wars that have given Chicago its tragic reputation have been fought over this gold of which only a small part was handed to "protect" the men who furnish the customers with the stuff. Of the rest, Colonel Randolph estimates that over a billion $10,000,000 is set aside every year to buy machine guns, for the corrupting of politicians and law enforcers.

"Consider profits in beer. A ten-cent glass costing the client nothing from manufacture to distribution. They mean a saving of brewing and country the outside of saloon. The highest cost of expense is protection. The closest contacts we can make of the men directly in the racket, and we can call Randolph estimates that over a billion $10,000,000 is set aside every year to buy machine guns, for the corrupting of politicians and law enforcers.

AMERICA SEEN FROM ABROAD

One of the most curious results of business depression in the United States is the attitude of British economists in their own minds and economic system. For a decade at least the British have become accustomed to regard American as possessing an economic magic which produced wealth without limit and precluded the dangers of poverty or suffering. This brief illusion, in which the historic system of Great Britain, engendered by the peculiar position of British trade and transfer of the world's financial capital from London to New York.

Just now the English are hearing and reading accounts of America's difficulties in their press and from returning visitors. Some of their information is facile, most of it exaggerated, but the essential point is present that the United States, like any other industrial country, has not yet learned to manage its economic system without frequent maladjustments.

Then is that year examinations, months and developing a new confidence in their own political and economic method. Meantime America is doubting tentatively with much ingenuity and governmental devices to manipulate foreign trade, many of the ones have been cried aright, and to hold responsible is considerable measure for Britain's plight.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

FAIR PLAY FOR THE RAILROADS

What may be a start toward a policy of "fair play" for the railroads is seen in the recent action of the Interstate Commerce Commission which has refused a number of unfavorable suggestions. Now the Commission offers little embodying some of these suggestions in form of preliminary suggestions. One of the bills would repeal the exemption provisions of the Transportation Act, which exempts from the law railroads in certain lines that of Europe. That is the basis of American prosperity and backbone.

In his attack on the American tariff system Mr. Miller was speaking to Christianity and international fellowship. It is of course being attacked quite generally by international bankers and industrialists who want to protect their investments in cheap labor markets abroad. But decent standards of living are the beginning of social justice. Americans are not responsible for the fact that foreign capitalism insists on keeping the worker on a mere subsistence basis. There is no reason why they should sacrifice American standards in the vain hope of saving the evils which grow out of that under-consumption which is the result of lower standards. The low wage, low standard of living theory which has prevailed in Europe, Asia and in Latin-America is in need of formation, not encouragement through the sacrifice of American standards.

WORLD SEEKS NEW CALENDAR

International attention will be featured during the next year to the possibilities of improving the calendar. The subject is to be taken up by the United States at a series of formal sessions during the summer and autumn, and official Washington will follow with keen interest the progress of European thought on the various plans which have been officially to sound and improve a system of months and days which origin with Pope Gregory XIII in 1582.

Students of calendar improvement have developed many plans which are being widely advocated they are the International Fixed Calendar, which proposes a year with thirteen months of 28 days each. The "Swiss Plan," favored in Europe, and The World Calendar now favored in this the same, as the halves and quarters are equalized and a perpetual calendar instead of each year. The arrangement within the quarters. Is effected by the World Calendar, however, is far less radical and less upsetting in its suggested changes, requiring the 12-month year, but lengthening February to 30 days, and making a few other alterations which would not disturb the present year exactly the same in length and arrangement.

Miss Elizabeth Achelis of New York, President of The World Calendar Association, Inc., has submitted a statement of the views of her body to the League of Nations, in which she says:

"We deprecate all heedless, revolutionary measures, advocating at all time the more temperate, more considerate methods in calendar reform, as in all things. The World Calendar is not a revolution. It is based upon foreign competition for the reason that there are a dozen important industrial nations in Europe covering the whole of the United States, and not large enough to be economically independent. Many of these have been destroyed into Europe, but mass production becomes a menace if unaccompanied by mass consumption power. That power cannot be developed in nations with statistically declining wage, where leaving populations live on a mere subsistence level. With nearly one-third of the consuming power of the world, it is impossessary for us to have production on cheapness secured by the degradation of the status of the worker; in other words, we can regulate our economic system by internal rather than external standards.

We maintain a large commerce with South America partly because we are South America's best customers, the balance of trade being heavily against us. It is not because of our protective tariff. A report of the Tariff Commission shows that while the average for the western hemisphere as a whole is about 24 per cent as compared with 16 per cent in the United States, Canada was entirely on a larger per cent of the value of American imports in tariffs where our own tariff law was passed than we were on Canadian imports after the new law was passed.

The loss of our protective tariff means that the way to end depression is to drag American standards of living down, rather than to bring foreign standards of living up, are following neither a selfish nor a humanitarian course, even though their argument is based on alleged ethical and religious grounds. A European economic union would be a step forward, and should be welcomed by all workers of world culture. It would make possible the use of the greater of higher wage rates and standards of living, through removal of the necessity of depending upon cheapness of production as a weapon in international competition. The consuming power of the United States per capita is four times that of Europe. That is the basis of American prosperity, so it is the basis of European poverty and bankruptcy.

In his attack on the American tariff system Mr. Miller was speaking to Christianity and international fellowship. It is of course being attacked quite generally by international bankers and industrialists who want to protect their investments in cheap labor markets abroad. But decent standards of living are the beginning of social justice. Americans are not responsible for the fact that foreign capitalism insists on keeping the worker on a mere subsistence basis. There is no reason why they should sacrifice American standards in the vain hope of saving the evils which grow out of that under-consumption which is the result of lower standards. NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By Frank P. Litschert

One of the most significant features of the world-wide depression is the seeming unanimity of opinion which has led in Europe that the march out of the slough of despond can on to the high road of prosperity must be led by Uncle Sam. There may be disagreement as to how this should be done but the opinion is almost unanimous that Uncle Sam must do it.

Of course there are differences of opinion on the subject and in general the European opinion differs from the opinion in this country, although there are of course, a great many internationalists here who, as is customary, agree with their European brothers. It seems to be the European idea—and the international idea in America—that Uncle Sam should cancel the war debts, wipe out his tariff protection, and by his voluntary or indirect by the League of Nations, so plunging himself into the European political analanche in an effort to stabilize it.

Needless to say Americans who have the real interest of their country at heart do not agree with this international basis. They believe that the results of the adoption of such a policy would be disastrous not only to America but to the rest of the world. The way to Europe as well cancelling the war debts would not wipe them out but would merely put each debt in position. 25 have been killed and 815 injured by automobiles, bus, train or trolley car. GOLDEN TREASURE

In olden days Dutch Argonds and seam-hacking pirates buried their treasure in strange, far-off places, and, according to Scottish folklore, carried magic charming where the booty was hidden.

Now in this modern age, however, a golden treasure lies in historical education. And the way to find it is also by magic. Instead of gallions or "shanks mare" for transportation, the use of today may use the airplane, automobile, bus, train or trolley car. National Road Reports now call attention to a hundred accident spots in and around that focal region of history—Washington and old Virginia, and provide a map in colors with sketches of every center of tradition in the capital and the Old Dominion.

AGRICULTURE DEPT RAISED PROGRAM FOR MARCH 23 TO 28

Changes in the agricultural outlook for 1931 brought almost by recent knowledge of the intentions of farmers to plant crops, will be summarized by agricultural economists of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, who will speak in the monthly land grant college radio program of the National Farm and Home Hour on Saturday, March 28.

Land grant colleges join with the Department of Agriculture to take the agricultural outlook information to farmers in their States. The January and February land grant college programs were devoted to announcing the outlook and to explaining the method of getting local information. This program will consider the series of three monthly broadcasts on Old Sigh. Music for the land grant college program in March will be provided by the Iowa State College band.

The Department of Agriculture and Farm Board programs of the week will include, for the Board, the final broadcast by Chris L. Christensen, member of the board, before he resigned from that board to become Dean of the Wisconsin College of Agriculture, and for the Department, addresses on such widely diverse topics as land utilization and honey plants.

The complete program for the week follows:

Monday, March 23—"Farm Relief and Crop Control," by Morse Salisbury, chief of Radio Service, Farm Board; "Weather and Crops," by H. N. Wheeler, chief forest inspector, Forest Service.

Tuesday, March 24—"The Garden Calendar," by W. F. Beattie, horticulturist, Bureau of Agricultural Economics; "Where Honey Comes From," by J. I. Hambleton, agriculturist, Bureau of Entomology.

Wednesday, March 25—"Weather and Crops," by Morse Salisbury, chief of Radio Service; "March Wheat Markets," by G. A. Collier, economist, Bureau of Agricultural Economics.

Thursday, March 26—"The Home-built Cabinet," Mrs. Rowena S. Carpenter, home economist, Bureau of Home Economics; "Dairy Markets," L. M. Davis, economist, Bureau of Agricultural Economics.

Friday, March 27—"The Farm Home Garden," Mrs. M. S. Breckenridge, director of information, Bureau of Home Economics; "Insecticides and Fungicides," by T. E. Rumsey, chief, Insecticide and Fungicide Board, Bureau of Chemistry and Soils.

Saturday, March 28—"Land Grant College Extension Including discussion of modifications in 1931 agricultural program," by members of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics.

The National Farm and Home Hour is broadcast from 12:30 p. m. to 1:30 p. m. Eastern Standard Time, 11:30 a. m. to 12:30 p. m. Central Standard Time, and 10:30 a. m. to 11:30 a. m. Mountain Standard Time.

YOUR MODERNIST FURNITURE

Modernism in furniture and interior decoration has suddenly developed into a style to be reckoned with by the latest experts. It turned over the old idea of a new favoring mid-Victorian decorator and furniture. No longer do the newest pieces look as if they had been hacked out of rock by a primitive man, but are delicate in plastic-like by a child in the Kindergarten.

THE ICE

What Is Is Compared With Past Seasons. Crossing From Beaver Island

Last Tuesday, a party of six men from Beaver Island, with three teams and sleighs, left the island on the Mr. E. Smith, arrived here after a hard trip across Lake Michigan, a distance of seventeen miles. When the party left the islands in the morning about the things which come to us from Europe and other lands. Better times may then spread to Europe and the other continents. Certainly burdening our people with additional taxes through debt cancellation, destroying our industries through lower tariffs, and upsetting our political equilibrium by getting into European politics will not help in the least.

BEWARE OF DRASTIC ENACTMENTS

All manner of schemes are being proposed in our states to rid the highways of reckless drivers, reduce automobile accidents and provide fi nancial compensation for innocent victims.

Such problems must be solved, according to the Baltimore Sun "through the application of common sense. Drastic enactments . . . do not work out satisfactorily. . . . There is no agreement that a way should be found to compensate victims of reckless automobilists, but there is agreement that a way should be found to punish and thus prevent reckless driving. The problem is the physiological abnormality, or fear to be replaced by the physiological abnormalities of the new pleasurable emotion." Here are the complaints. "The same would be true of anything other than candy if it were made as attractive and accessible as candy. The reason candy has been good for us is by experimental work it is because candy is almost universally liked, especially by children, and it is easy to get, easy to keep and easy to administer."

Syrups left over from cooking fruit for canning purposes may be used to moisten pudding and other fruit drinks.

As we go to press there is no ice to be seen in Lake Michigan, and the ice in Round Lake is rapidly breaking up.

We are to have an regular heath here the coming season among which will be the Russian ivy and lizzie, with Capes, fithun and Penny. No better men can be found.

The bill relative to the improvement of Pine River introduced by Senator Moffatt, passed the Senate on the 28th, and will, no doubt, pass the House and receive the Governor's sanction. The bill provides for the drainage and re-mission of swamp lands lying in this and Antrim county by means of straightening, deepening and removing obstructions in the channel of Pine River. Also, that a commissioner be appointed by the governor, whose duty it shall be to superintend the improvements contemplated. To secure the said improvements sixteen sections, or 10,240 acres of swamp lands are appropriated, to be selected only from the counties of Charlevoix and Antrim. To select from five to ten tracts in the two counties 23,000 acres of 600 in Charlevoix and 1,000 in Antrim. It is estimated that the appropriation will be sufficiently large to both deepen and straighten the channel, secure seven or eight feet of water, and construct suitable piers for protection at the mouth. A petition is being circulated and very generally signed, for the appointment of A. Cleveland Engerson, of this village, as commissioner. We think no better choice could be made. Mr. Bittner is a competent and lawful man and the people will find in him a vigorous prosecutor and prudent manager of the work.

Hon. John Nicholls will leave England for home on the 14th of this month.

The committee appointed by M. J. Simonson to award the prizes offered by that gentleman for the best loaves of bread made by young ladies of Charlevoix, awarded the prizes in the following manner: The First prize, Lizzie Bell, second, Ella Aldrich; third, Emma J. Smith. There were but seven competitors.

The evening of March 4th was celebrated on the north side by a magnificent illumination of the residences of Hon. John Nicholls, James Inwood and Dr. Lewis in honor of the inauguration of President Garfield. The night was truly a magical affair, one Much of the credit for the plan is due to Miss Hazel Nicholls, a faithful subject of her gracious Queen Victoria, but a lady who has become pretty thoroughly Americanized by her sojourn among the Yankees.

RAILROAD RACKET

The Matter of Route One of Vexatious Surprises.

The Sentinel went to press last week during the progress of the D. C. and M. meeting in this village. Some of the Grand Rapids officials would give any information up to that time, concerning the route, or other details, and the information we gave our readers was from "deductions" and surface indications.

There seems to be a combination of facts to indicate that the plans of the company had been changed and that the road would come by the bay shore. But it now appears that all these circumstances were only a "division". for some purpose known only to the general in command. Such a ruse was sometimes necessary in a railroad campaign.

The Sentinel this week, however, is able to state that the road will come by the Intermediate valley and Belaire, in accordance with original plans.

At the meeting Wednesday, nearly all the stock of the D. C. & M. was represented by the G. R. & W. Company and the following Board of Directors was chosen: Charles M. Heath, Wm. Alden Smith, A. V. Agnew, Grand Rapids; F. A. Damon, Harry Newcomb, Boston; James Austin, Grand Rapids; R. M. Cherrie, Chicago; F. J. Moesh, Charlevoix; J. Howard, D. B. Rogers, Grand Rapids, E. A. Sims, Muskegon.

The meeting adjourned to meet at General Manager Heath's office in Grand Rapids at which time a president, secretary and treasurer will be elected.

The fact that the "Chicago & Northern Michigan" company was organized in Grand Rapids recently, seems "in the light of their action here, to mix matters in the minds of the public, but that was only a means to an end. We are given to understand by one supposed to know that the Grand Rapids organization was perfected and legalized in order that no delay should occur, in case of failure to arrange matters here according to their plans. The Charlevoix organization is the one which the extension will be made.

Mr. Heald informed the Sentinel Wednesday that contracts for the work would be signed before April 1st and the work begun at both ends of the line as soon as possible. It is intended that that portion of the road between Charlevoix and Petoskey may be completed in time for the opening of navigation this spring, account is taken of the heavy work of snow as an indication of a late opening. This is an error. The body of ice off this point and around the Island is of less thickness than those of several winters of the past few years. The deep snow upon the ice has prevented what the extreme cold weather would otherwise have accomplished in this regard and will do the work well in rotting the ice when spring sums transform it into water. Water can be seen from this place any day and a party of fishermen last week found water with one foot of ice, within two miles of this harbor, in Lake Michigan. The fact is, there is no more snow than on Lake Michigan, and an early opening of navigation is not improbable.

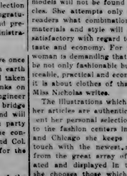
After his triumphant re-election last Monday, President Harry Nicholls is feeling good. He was worried considerable during the fore part of the day, but the gains were so heavy in the afternoon that his election was assured. We heartily congratulate the popular president, and predict for him a successful administration.

The old iron bridge, which we once thought was the only bridge of its kind (of its kind), is practically all taken down and is piled up in chunks on the revetment. Assistant Engineer Christie, representing the bridge company, arrived Saturday and will remain until the construction party arrives. Crushed stone for the concrete work, is being hauled and Col Woodin is watching things for the township.

A man named Todd, one of the Monroe bridge gang, slipped into the river from the guard pier on Tuesday morning and had a close call. With the aid of a pair of barrel skids and a rope, Todd was landed. He was hustled into the Turf Exchange and a few dashes of their Todd(ip) drowned him, after which he thawed out and went home to change his clammy garments.

Mrs. Will See, who, with her husband is visiting here, has to her possession the Masonic diploma of her grandfather, also his mark as a mark master mason, the latter bearing the date of 5816 (1816). The diploma, which certified to his membership in a New York City lodge, bears the date of 5810 (1810). The interesting feature of these relics is that they passed through the Chicago fire, and their present owner has the metal case in which they were kept and which bears unmistakable evidence of that terrible scorch of 1871. Another interesting feature of the case is that Mr. and Mrs. See, who are going to New York before their return to Oregon, will hunt up the old lodge and tender it the ancient relics. The "mark" of which we speak is a flat, thin piece of silver, two and one half inches long and one and one half inches wide. On one side is the lettered keystone, with the "mark" in the center, and on the obverse side the name of the owner, name and number of the mark master's lodge and date. They are very interesting and valuable Masonic relics.

SHE IS AN EXPERT ON GOOD TASTE AND ECONOMY IN DRESS



CHERIE NICHOLAS

Among the many features in this newspaper which are of special interest to our women readers, it isn't difficult to guess that probably the most popular is the illustrated fashion article which Cherie Nicholas has for what woman does not like to appear in clothes which carry the message of her being well-dressed and recognized among her friends as such? And thousands of women throughout the United States look to Miss Nicholas to tell them about the up-to-the-minute fashions which are available to them at a moderate cost.

Miss Nicholas is one of the recognized authorities on dress and style in the United States. Although a native of St. Louis, her career in fashion first started in Chicago when she was asked to do style articles for one of the leading millinery trade magazines. From there she went to her appointment as associate editor of this publication. She next became advertising manager of the largest wholesale millinery house in the West, having charge of twelve departments, and also editing the magazine which this company published. Next she was called to the editorship of the Millinery Herald, published by the Millinery Jobbers' Association of the West, and successfully conducted that publication for several years.

Branching out from her work in the millinery line, Miss Nicholas began writing about other women's fashions and soon became one of the leading writers for various trade publications and syndicate services. The best criterion of the value of her fashion articles is the tribute paid to them by prominent retail dealers, wholesalers, and women readers throughout the country. These tributes are contained in such expressions as these: "It always startles me to see how much interesting editorial copy you can weave around a quite usual looking frock," and "I enjoy your fashion articles because of their never-waning enthusiasm of expression and keenness of thought."

The styles which Miss Nicholas tells her readers about are up-to-the-minute styles, but they are not extreme styles. Descriptions of fresh models will not be found in her articles. She attempts only to tell her readers what combinations of color, materials and style will prove most satisfactory with regard to individual taste and economy. For the modern woman is demanding that her clothes be not only fashionable but also serviceable, practical and economical, and it is about clothes of that kind that Miss Nicholas writes.

The illustrations which accompany her articles are authentic and represent her personal selection. By visits to the fashion centers in New York and Chicago she keeps in constant touch with the newest models, and from the great array of styles created and displayed in these places she chooses those which experience tells her will be most acceptable to the women for whom she writes.

The publishers of this newspaper consider themselves fortunate in being able to obtain the work of this expert on a subject which is of so much interest to all women and we do think of no better advice to give our women readers than that they read Miss Nicholas' articles and tell their friends about them.

"Dearie, you weren't listening to what I said."

"Er—What makes you think that, my love?"

"I asked you if you could let me have $75 and you smiled and said, 'Yes, dearest'."

THE GRAVEYARD OF LOST BUILDINGS

In an article on "The Graveyard of Lost Buildings," in Safeguarding American Against Fire states that if all the structures that have been destroyed by fire could be gathered together they would create the largest city in the world. It would go on for uncountable miles — street after street of ruin and desolation.

If it were possible to create this city, it would provide an object lesson in the menace of fire that would never be forgotten. It would show vividly the tragedy of a waste that destroys almost half a billion dollars worth of property and ten thousand lives each year.

It may be that one reason for the carelessness most Americans show to fire is the protection afforded by insurance. There is a mistaken notion that insurance can replace, in the immediate sense, what is wasted by the carelessness or ignorance. As a matter of fact, nothing can compensate for the indirect results of fire—loss of time, business and employment, tax increases, etc. Nor can a fire insurance policy bring back ruined property any more than life insurance can bring back the dead. Every fire means that the world is so much poorer in raw materials.

Perhaps the greatest aid to successful fire prevention is better building construction. In many communities building laws fail to take into consideration of new hazards that have appeared in recent years. It should be remembered that the highest possible construction standards are in the long run, always the cheapest.

SQUARE CROWNS ON ROUND HEADS

Who said a crown must be round? Word comes from Paris that hats will be larger this spring and that many a crown will be square. We seem to remember something about "wearing is the head that wears a crown." Maybe this means a square crown.

But we will have comfortable hats, too, this year—especially for sports. Little brown, stubby felts and straw hats will be very chic. They will usually match the frock with which they are worn. Thus we will see jersey berets with jersey frocks. Those very ultra smart members for golf and tennis and general country wear will have casual, informal little tam bans made in identical or contrasting colors of the same kind of washes out of which the frocks are cut.

"INSIDE" INFORMATION

Simmer new years, you tell them, Add salt when the cooking is hair done. Salt lightly. Do not cover during cooking, and do not cook longer than necessary for tenderness.

Cook spinach for 10 or 15 minutes only, in just the water that clings to the leaves after washing it through several waters. When it begins to get tender, chop it very fine and season with plenty of butter, or cream if you have it, and salt and pepper.

Contrast in flavor is important in a meal. Do not repeat the same flavor twice often. For instance, although tomatoes now on the menu are heartily recommended, it is a mistake to serve a meal beginning with tomato soup, followed by tomato sauce on the meat, or stewed tomatoes, and fresh sliced tomato salad.

Acquaint yourself with the various cuts of canned and package goods, to know how many servings each will give. Get into the habit of looking for the weight on a box of cereal or the number of fluid ounces in bottled goods. Compare brands with each other to see which gives the best value.

Try a mock duck when you want a palatable, inexpensive, baked meat. It's really a flank steak, stuffed with bread crumb dressing, rolled, tied, and baked. Be sure to roll lengthwise so that in carving the meat is cut across the muscles.

French toast is a breakfast or luncheon dish, sure to be popular with the family. Beat 2 eggs and add to them one-half to three-fourths cup of milk, and a little salt. Cut well-baked, overstreated, rather dry bread into uniform slices about one-fourth of an inch thick. Dip these into the egg mixture, until well penetrated, drain, and fry at once in butter or good-flavored fat in a heavy frying skillet. Use moderate heat and let the toast become golden brown before turning. Serve at once with bacon or with syrup or some other sweet.—Department of Agriculture.

NAVAL "WAR" RESULTS

According to the Navy Recruiting Station, Detroit, Admiral William V. Pratt, U. S. Navy, chief of naval operations, who is viewing the "war" problem being brought to completion between the "Blue" and "Black" fleets off the lower coast of Central America, has outlined the following comment to the Navy Department:

Thus far the fleet problem being staged has revealed two outstanding points. First, the necessity for cruisers, and especially those of the flying-deck type; and second, the justification under favorable conditions of the lighter-than-air craft as shown by the use of the Los Angeles.

Iowa Brothers Set New World's Record in Ford

Governor John Hammill of Iowa (left) and Walter Ferrell, executive secretary of the Iowa chapter of the American Automobile Association (extreme right), congratulating the Davis brothers on the successful accomplishment of a new world's non-motor, non-wheel stop automobile endurance record.

IOWA state officials and civic leaders witnessed the establishment of a new world's non-motor, non-wheel stop automobile endurance record recently. When Ralph and Rolland Davis, brothers, brought their Model A Ford to a halt at the east entrance of the state capitol in Des Moines after 2,775 hours and 46 minutes of continuous driving.

When Governor Hammill, standing with Walter Ferrell, executive secretary of the Iowa chapter of the American Automobile Association, gave the signal to stop, the Ford had traveled a total of 42,195.8 miles over all sorts of roads, in all sorts of weather and had exceeded by 23,650 miles and more than 2,335 hours the American non-stop endurance record which, theretofore officially recognized, was made by a much heavier car under almost ideal conditions on the Indianapolis speedway two years. In the course of the endurance run, the car, known as "The City of Des Moines," covered practically the entire state of Iowa.

Engineers who examined the Ford at the conclusion of the run asserted that neither engine nor chassis showed evidences of the gruelling strain to which they were subjected during the 116 days of continuous driving. Both apparently, according to the engineers, would have been good for another 50,000 miles or more.

Sons of St. Patrick

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

AS MARCH 17 approaches and thousands of Americans, not only those of Irish blood but others as well, prepare to honor the patron saint of the Emerald Isle by wearing a bit of "the green" on St. Patrick's day, it is fitting that they give some thought to the contribution which those sons of St. Patrick, the Irish, have made to the building of this nation. And to appreciate their significance, it is necessary to go back to the beginning of the republic and to inquire into the number of Irish who were in this country when the Revolution began and who, remembering the memories of oppression Britain had in Ireland before they came to America, were among the first to take up arms in this colonies' struggle for liberty from English domination.

The researches of historians in recent years have brought to light the fact that a disproportionate large percentage of the patriots of '76 were "fighting Irish"—surprisingly large in view of the popular idea that the majority of the colonists were of pure English blood. They have also revealed that nearly 1,500 officers and 75,000 of the rank and file in the Revolutionary army were either born in Ireland or were of Irish ancestry.

Not the greatest representation of the Irish in the patriot cause was that of membership as shown by the fact that in the list of patriots in the Continental army there were 49,000 who were born in Ireland, and eight others who were sons of Irish parents. Add to that list of Irish-born patriots those signers of the Declaration of Independence, the two captains whose names appeared in history as the "Fathers of the American Navy," and the surgeon general, as well as the nation's secretary to the Treasury and who later became governors of war under Washington and Adams, and it will be seen why there is some truth in the statement that Irishmen were among the most prominent of the founders of the republic.

After reading a record for himself as a patriot isn't sufficient evidence of the colonists' desire to become citizens of the United States, Irish-born men and their descendants have been prominent in the affairs of the nation from the time of its birth. Of the 55 men who signed the Declaration of Independence, nine were Irish-born men and two were sons of Irish parents. Add to that list of Irish-born patriots those signers of the Declaration of Independence, the two captains whose names appeared in history as the "Fathers of the American Navy," and the surgeon general, as well as the nation's secretary to the Treasury and who later became governors of war under Washington and Adams, and it will be seen why there is some truth in the statement that Irishmen were among the most prominent of the founders of the republic.

GEN. RICHARD MONTGOMERY

Outstanding among the soldiers leaders was Richard Montgomery, born near Raphoe, Ireland, December 2, 1736, who entered the British army at the age of eighteen and won renown as the siege of Louisburg during the French and Indian war and in the West Indies. But when he came to his father-in-law's home in New York he found himself in sympathy with the Revolutionary cause and was among the first to take up arms in this colonies' struggle for liberty from English domination.

The researches of historians in recent years have brought to light the fact that a disproportionate large percentage of the patriots of '76 were "fighting Irish"—surprisingly large in view of the popular idea that the majority of the colonists were of pure English blood. They have also revealed that nearly 1,500 officers and 75,000 of the rank and file in the Revolutionary army were either born in Ireland or were of Irish ancestry.

Not the greatest representation of the Irish in the patriot cause was that of membership as shown by the fact that in the list of patriots in the Continental army there were 49,000 who were born in Ireland, and eight others who were sons of Irish parents. Add to that list of Irish-born patriots those signers of the Declaration of Independence, the two captains whose names appeared in history as the "Fathers of the American Navy," and the surgeon general, as well as the nation's secretary to the Treasury and who later became governors of war under Washington and Adams, and it will be seen why there is some truth in the statement that Irishmen were among the most prominent of the founders of the republic.

Among those Irish-born generals in reverse of the French and Indian war, who also served in the Canadian expedition, but lived to perform valuable service for the cause of liberty, were William Thompson, William Irvine and William Maxwell. To Thompson, born in Ireland in 1725, "all the distinction of being placed in command of the first troops raised in aides of the Continental congress. This was the battalion of eight companies of Pennsylvania riflemen which were recruited in the summer of 1775 and which Thompson, as colonel, led to the siege of Boston. He was made a brigadier-general in March, 1776, and the following month was sent with four regiments as reinforcements for the Canadian expedition. Instead of the retreating army he took command in place of Gen. John Thomas, who was ill, and later turned over that command to Gen. John Sullivan. In carrying out Sullivan's order to attack the enemy at Three Rivers, Thompson was taken prisoner, but two months later was allowed to return to Philadelphia on parole. He was shortly two years before he was exchanged and in June of 1778, Pa., in the last year of the war.

Irvine, who was born near Enniskillen, Ireland, November 3, 1741, was a cousin to Thompson's by birth and shared with him in the Three Rivers attack and in the Sullivan expedition. After his exchange in 1778, he was placed in command of the Second Pennsylvania brigade, promoted to brigadier-general in 1779 and served with Lord Stirling and "Mad Anthony" Wayne the following year. In 1785, he was given the difficult assignment of commanding at Fort Pitt and guarding the northwestern frontier from Indian attacks, as well as adjusting the differences between the Virginians and the Pennsylvanians over the ownership of that region. He filled the position so efficiently and so won the esteem of Washington that in 1794 the first President placed him in command of the troops which suppressed the famous "Whisky Rebellion" of that year.

Maxwell was born in Ireland but came to this country with his parents who settled in New Jersey. After reading a record for himself as a patriot isn't sufficient evidence of the colonists' desire to become citizens of the United States, Irish-born men and their descendants have been prominent in the affairs of the nation from the time of its birth. Of the 55 men who signed the Declaration of Independence, nine were Irish-born men and two were sons of Irish parents. Add to that list of Irish-born patriots those signers of the Declaration of Independence, the two captains whose names appeared in history as the "Fathers of the American Navy," and the surgeon general, as well as the nation's secretary to the Treasury and who later became governors of war under Washington and Adams, and it will be seen why there is some truth in the statement that Irishmen were among the most prominent of the founders of the republic.

SCHOOL NOTES

Declamatory Contest

Last Thursday a Declamatory and Oratorical Contest was held in the High School Assembly. The four representing the Freshman and Sophmore classes gave the following declamations.

Janet Livingstone—"King Philip in the White Settlers."

John Winder—"The Second Inaugural Address"—Lincoln.

Dorothy Staley—"Illinois, the Man Called of God".

Albert McMillan—"A Plea for Cuba."

The following first from the Junior and Senior classes were there to attend:

Esther Carse—The Horrors of War.

Lila McMillan—"Das Heilige".

Mary L. Gallagher—"The Horrors of War."

Margaret Maybee—"Paine"

Of the gems the three judges, Mr. Rauch, Mr. Parker and Mr. Lowyers, gave Janet Livingstone first and John Winder second place for their interpretation. The orations were given by Margery Massey, first, and Lila McMillan, second. Margery and Janet will represent the school in the district Oratorical and Declamatory contest to be held the second week in April. Mr. Parker will coach Janet.

The Physics class has just started the study of electricity. This phase of the work is given more study than any other topic taken up by the class.

This is an interesting item. Mr. North gave us some interesting information this morning concerning the number of pupils absent during the past two weeks. During the week of Feb. 23 to 27th, 38 full days of school were lost. During the week of March 2nd to the 6th, 122 full days were lost. Monday, March 9th, 53 students were out of school and Tuesday morning 44 students were absent. These last two numbers include many country students who would not get in because of the stormy weather.

SUCH IS LIFE--The Good Boy

By Charles Sughroe

Horrors of Russian Prison Camp

Habitations. A young graduate in physiology accepts the position managed by exiles from the Nazis. Hardship comes through several men becoming insane and dying from homesickness.

Yes, there must be a way that the hardships could be mitigated but to live in a common room, the half of which happens to have some of itself occupied, will wear on the nerves of the most stolid. When the men are standing with their backs to you, carefully shaving themselves or combing their hair or just standing there looking out of the window, the mind has to get use to it to a no young man's accustomed to the sight. There must be some way that would get us used to all and to some particular time but get on the other side. There would be a moment of relief.

Only One-Fourth Criminals

Of the prisoners about one-fourth were criminals and the best women guards of the camp. Nearly three-fourths of them were forced to work in the fields. The work was not a hard, for the most part consisted chopping or cutting, cleaning and piling it. Women and young workers managed to get through their task in 11 hours, but the average time was 15 hours.

Escapes Are Few.

Considering that "A band of thrill, no doubt, would have been formed to fight a way out and a general uprising in order to escape, beyond the death of Marina Popov, several men, the records do show.

One night seven workers would not return to the camp. Their absence was noted and search parties were sent out. Two days later the prisoners were given a little more water than usual for, as it was soon learned, seven of their number had been found dead. Whether they had died of thirst or had been murdered by guards to keep them from escaping was not known.

Epidemics Kill Thousands.

Refused to work resulted in double time punishment. The camp authorities attempted to weaken those three ways, with disastrous results. Typhus, cholera and other diseases broke out. The doctors were powerless to stop the spread of the disease and thousands died.

Then people, sometimes, knew and some guessed. The knowledge of the epidemics was kept from the outside world. Many times as it became, the epidemics were kept from the guards. Those who knew and guessed were forced to work in the fields and in the forests, and in the Arctic night, when the frost is so severe as to leave even the strongest exhausted. Absolutely horrible these epidemics were, for they killed 1,000,000 people working in the Siberian timber camps.

Getting One's Name Into the Paper

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

When I was fourteen or so I became enamored with the idea of my name appearing in the paper. I was a shrewd youngster and knew well enough that the surest method to interest the public in me was to get my name in the paper as frequently as possible. I thought it might be helpful in the realization of the first purpose if it figured conspicuously in connection with my particular neighborhood from which I aspired to appear far and away more prominent than that customarily. I was to receive the newspaper free of charge by my service which was to supply a supply of stamped envelopes and print paper upon which to write the resignee and remedy of the business.

I was a novice to the art of "puffing" then. I knew of course that stories, marriages, deaths, accidents, and such or changes in the personnel of a business should be recognized and I was familiar with the conventional phrases in which these stories should be told but it was a battle to get my name in frequently, for I knew that these conventional stories would be of comparatively rare occurrence in the life of a young man.

"What shall I write about?" I inquired.

"Nothing happens very often where we live."

"What people want most," the editor went on, "is to see their names in the paper. Get in the habit. Look around and see about those two There is a meeting of the Ladies' Aid Society at the church parlors tonight. Write a story about it. Say that Mrs. Jones presided and that Mrs. Smith read a paper and a duet was sung by Mrs. Brown and Miss Green. Mention the refreshments served. COMMON SENSE IDEAS IN TRANSPORTATION

Motor bus transportation is becoming more important simultaneously. The individual habit of travel and the economical advantages of the new and growing form of transportation, and T. H. Wilson, as chairman of the state highway commission, is determined to encourage, not prevent it.

The commission of people by the railroads have always been of prime importance. They supply the channels of trade, they are the arteries which bring a daily tribute. The movement of coal, domestic and industrial, the movement of ores and other heavier necessities of commerce and industry, the movement of livestock to the packing houses and other markets, all these are of great importance. The railroads have always had a full share of these movements of commerce and of people in connection.

The railroads have built up service, every one factors—conveniences and economies. The motor bus is a new factor in the field. The habit of travel manufactures. For the most part they are a convenience to the man that they are a convenience to the man who has to travel every day or every week. Many people are using money for the luxury of a motor car.

Development of motor bus transportation has been undoubtedly slower because of approximately four years of war, during which the energies of the United States.

This habit has grown and created the demand for the conveyance. The fact is that both the railroad and the motor bus are necessary to the advantage of the transportation of people of the United States. There are 140,000 miles of railroad in the United States, one of the most extensive railroad systems in the world. There are 14,000 motor buses in operation, and the number is increasing daily. The railroads have invested in equipment and facilities for the handling of 40,000,000 passengers a year. The motor buses have invested in equipment and facilities for the handling of 8,000,000 passengers a year. If 10 per cent of the railroad passengers should travel by motor bus, and 10 per cent of the motor bus passengers should travel by railroad, the railroad would lose 4,000,000 passengers and the motor bus would gain 4,000,000 passengers. The railroads would lose $40,000,000 and the motor bus would gain $40,000,000 in revenue. That is a great deal of money for a people to transact.

The motor bus itself is a convenience. It has been established by the railroads as a feeder to the railroads. It has been established by the railroads as a feeder to the railroads. It has been established by the railroads as a feeder to the railroads

GEN. TAYLOR ENTERS MEXICO APRIL, 1846

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

WHEN the first shot sounded much of mankind went about its business the 19th greatest news event in history. Only once in four years does it happen that the world's attention is focused on the election of a President of the United States. Then, for a few days, all else is forgotten.

The next most splendid historic event is a war which—as in the case of the American war just ended—is declared. On April 20, 1861 Americans marched in serried ranks through the streets of Baltimore, just as their fathers had fought in those streets in April, 1775. In March a little more than 20 years after the Spanish-American war had been proclaimed in Philadelphia the Tribune issued their call for volunteers. And in the latter instance were you called in 1898? Just remember that the Spanish-American war was declared in April, 1898, and that the Tribune call was issued in March, 1898. Just 71 months, six years 11 months, to the day, before the declaration of war. Many soldiers fought in Cuba who had been born in America at the height of another war—a war which cause them sacrifices to form a treasured memory for the rest of their days. Many of the supreme tests of the United States in war have come in the month of April.

When Texas came into the Union she brought trouble with her—but only another element in the trouble which had already been growing for more than a quarter of a century. Texas was a bandit's dispute with Mexico, a dispute which the United States had refused to settle, and which had also been western boundary was the Rio Grande. The Rio Grande is the north of Mexico. When Zachary Taylor in 1845 moved his troops to the mouth of the river he was within the disputed territory. In January, 1846, Taylor was ordered to move his troops to the Rio Grande, where the general dug out on the Santa Fe trail. Brown's Spanish of Spain.

Thereupon General Arrieta, the Mexican commander, informed Taylor that he considered his advance an act of war and that he would be compelled to repel the invasion. Taylor refused to move. Thereupon Arrieta's troops crossed the river and on April 24, 1846 surprised and captured a force of 63 men of Captain Thornton's army and wounding sixteen. Although the officer, quickly made up his mind and on May 11, 1846 blockhoused on April 24 started the Mexican war which resulted in adding to American territory the vast expanse of the great Southwest.

But the acquisition of this territory was not obtained the Capella over slavery led to the secession of eleven states and the formation of the Confederate States of America. The war clouds were gathering fast when Abraham Lincoln was inaugurated President but the storm did not break until April 1861. At dawn on April 12, 1861 bloodshed on April 24 started the war which resulted in adding to American territory the vast expanse of the great Southwest.

But the acquisition of this territory also

Superintendent Speaks

On Monday morning Mr. Otterbein gave us a very inspirational talk on "Building an ideals of character." He expressed the idea that the American people are too much inclined to be self-indulgent. He also told us that Thanksgiving occasion is a very important holiday, and that the high school students should not be eaten into with drugs a thing bad way.

Senior Play

Last Thursday and Friday Mr. Hollen had the seniors try out for the senior play, every senior had to give selection of their choice. The parts will be decided upon in a few days and books have been ordered and each has given out his or her parts.

Girl Scouts

The girl members of the high school have volunteered for a two months' service. Method meetings will be held at 10:45 on the days, under the leadership of Miss Mary Lemmen. Miss Montgomery, Supervisor of the girl scout troops from Petoskey has also consented to help.

Senior Commencement Plans

The senior class has started making commencement plans. The announcements, the invitations, the committee of Arden Smith, Bill Sloan, Mary Simmons and Lois Lewis met Tuesday afternoon.

Good old "Red and White" colors are working with Lois Simmons in charge of decorating at the last dance.

Drama Club

The Drama Club has continued practice on the Shakespearian plays which the members will soon present. Miss Lemmen has also organized a class for exercises in body direction in plays and she has also rearranged the seating on the principles of acting and of stage lighting.

The Drama Club, we have no doubt will become a permanent organization as soon as many students are very interested in the work.

Sixth Grade

On Monday afternoon the sixth grade presented an original play in social science. The characters were dressed and represented the customs of whipping cream, bake and boiling meat and all other products. Those persons we think as representatives of the types, who might enjoy seeing them a good showing. Said values by the students appeared. The boys and girl who would be tying handles at the bending and tool makers. Both brought back a whole week's work in the home. One boy exhibited the contents of his pockets on Mr. A.'s desk, which after being gathered up one and arranged for polished nails, saw and Jack. The well spoken and well behaved, were good members.

Pep Meeting

A grand old pep meeting was held in the assembly last Friday morning in the basketball boys tournament at their annual at the Class Tournament. Coach Kipke and Coach Bennett of Petoskey had addressed a few remarks. Coach Kipke's remarks were to the effect that the best team in Northern Michigan, regardless of class, having defeated every other team or defeated some other team that defeated the others, in this region. Then the finals were Boyne City, which won the Class B championship, defeated Cadillac, which won from Alpena, which had Charlevoix, which last all the Class A champions. Coach Bennett said that, four times the boys beat Boyne City, which defeated every team that Traverse City lost. And the finals, when you make a few games in that you have to be careful that you don't get overconfident and careless. Coach Kipke said that the boys were going to the tournament and they would certainly do their best to bring home the championship.

Before the session started we predicted that Charlevoix would win first place in the Class "A" tournament and Harbor would surely be second. That included stop the Class B games in this district, but the record of all three teams shows that they are the best in the entire region, counting B, C and D games in only this district but also counting the other districts in the north. And our judgment of the respective merits of the three teams was correct, with Charlevoix first in everything; Harbor second and Boyne third in the practice basket scores

Kindness Wins Nurse Deserved Fortune

Uncommon, R. I.—The will of the late Miss Josephine Hunt, who died in September last, left $5,000 to Miss Anna Thomas, a nurse who cared for Miss Hunt during her last years, with no known relatives.

The will was first taken before a jury in probate court, and a hearing on it held, to determine whether or not it was executed properly.

The whole case grew a knotty problem and caused considerable comment.

Charles Evans Hall, executor named in the will, had had a hearing on it, and had filed it with the probate court. He said he was satisfied that the will was executed properly.

Miss Thomas, however, was confronted by a number of relatives who contested the will on the ground that it was executed under undue influence.

At this time Miss Potter, presiding over the proceedings, ordered, upon the request of counsel, that the assistance fee for the three members of the jury be increased from $10 to $15 per day.

Miss Potter, according to the stenographic notes, also ordered that the assistance fee for the stenographer be increased from $10 per day to $15 per day.

Miss Potter, according to the stenographic notes, also ordered that the assistance fee for the bailiff be increased from $10 per day to $15 per day.

Miss Potter, according to the stenographic notes, also ordered that the assistance fee for the clerk be increased from $10 per day to $15 per day.

Miss Potter, according to the stenographic notes, also ordered that the assistance fee for the court reporter be increased from $10 per day to $15 per day.

Miss Potter, according to the stenographic notes, also ordered that the assistance fee for the court interpreter be increased from $10 per day to $15 per day.

Miss Potter, according to the stenographic notes, also ordered that the assistance fee for the court physician be increased from $10 per day to $15 per day.

WHO'S RIGHT ABOUT COMMISSIONS?

A marked difference of opinion has developed among thinking observers in Washington as to the real usefulness of commissions, such as the Wickersham group, in determining programs and drawing with national problems.

Hoover's advocacy of commissions has led many of his followers to view commissions as a panacea for every controversial subject. Another group of Congressional leaders have swung to the opposite extreme, believing that the commission idea is a menace to legislation, an obstruction, a superfluity and even a distraction.

A method which by Senator Hiram, on the use of commissioners, has served to focus opinion. Some individual is summed up as follows:

"The trouble with commissions is not so much that they are a government by experts as that they are a government by men who, by the very nature of their job, are interested in only one thing. They are interested in only one thing. They are interested in only one thing. They

Glad Season of Renewal

A season of rejoicing is now upon us, with the arrival of Easter. Life, in this new early summer through the advent month, seemed fuller. The leaves and the new trees covered the earth's nakedness, and the flowers, with the sap now rising in the boughs, like the greenery birds, began their notes of thanksgiving for the awakening and the early springs of the earth. All this was especially made manifest in the Easter season, with the Lenten penitence and the desire to commune with God's creation in the spring and awakened nature once more in evidence.

So it is today.

It is indeed a consolation and a comfort that in the modern urban setting with its complexities of the varied conditions of life and night and experiences of the more humble and rural districts of the North and West, the tradition of Easter, the central observance, with solemn ceremonies and with the joyous festivities after the Sunday feast of the Easter sunrise, the real principles of the Christian faith and its hopes, still survive. Indeed, the observance of Easter is the culmination of the belief that man from the lowliest estate, the humblest birth, and death after long years of suffering, can rise to the highest realm of existence, from the dead into a life everlasting, triumphant over everything—and all appeal to the individual as an entity from that.

The Sunday, the first day of the week, commemorates the Jewish Sabbath on the seventh day of the week, the day of rest. And this Easter note was the call to mark the first differentiation of the Christians from the Jewish faith, as in many ways a subsidiary inner ostensible sanctuary.

The very first Christians set their Easter feast in the Jewish month of Nisan, or April 3rd, and continued it upon what do to mark the Sabbath as an initial observance. But about the time of Pope Victor, 192 years after Septimius Severus

Old Tradition Preserved.

The early Christians carried over into their new faith many of the old customs of the Jewish world. Many of the observances were the pagan festivals of the year, which had to do with the changing of the seasons, and which were the natural expressions of human, a contemporary sense of the proper duty for celebrating the feast, harmonize the Gentile Christians in point of the church's more exclusively Jewish observance in the 40th year. The Apostle Simeon lived with the Jewish Christians that Peter should be considered on the basis of the celebration of the Jewish Sabbath on the seventh day of the week. The Jewish Christians had their Easter on March 20, days were fixed not passed were passed with prayer and fasting. It was to commemorate the event immediately.

LIFE AGAIN

Out of the death's shadow,
Then, a sparky,
Out of the cloud a silence,
Then, a lark,

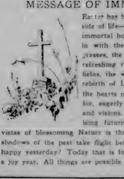
Life again.

MESSAGE OF IMMORTAL HOPE



Easter has become the symbol of the bright side of life—the joy, the good, the light, the immortal hope of humanity. It is ushered in with the songs of birds, the renewed grasses, the greening trees, the flowers, the refreshing rains, the smell of the growing things, the blue sephyrs of spring, the rebirth of Love and the responding joy in the hearts of men. It is a day long looked for, eagerly expected, followed by dreams and visions. It is a day of new and promising futurity. Easter and its associated observances are the most significant of the year. The shadows of the past take flight before its radiance. Were we unhappy yesterday? Today that is forgotten. Easter is the dawn of a joy year. All things are possible again.

Service of Easter Eve by Ethiopian Convents

Most impressive is the Easter eve service held by the Ethiopian monks in the convent of the Holy Sepulcher, at Jerusalem. Before the fifth century even that of Nicene the Ethiopians had a large share of the sacred spots in Palestine. Now they are convent themselves with the far east and share control of the Holy Sepulcher church, and a few priests are in the walls at Jerusalem.

On the night before Easter fifty Ethiopian priests set up an altar under a tent on the corner of the Holy Sepulchre court. Here, as near as he can get to the church of the Holy Sepulcher, a congregation stands after a 24 hour chronicle chant. Before him Ethiopian monks bring in processions bearing ikons and rattling sistras, consecrated instruments like enormous children's rattles, such a picture as the National Geographic society.

Three times the congregation circle around the tents in their curious dancing gait, to the accompaniment of chanting that reminds one of both Western and Eastern airs. As they pass each time they become more excited. The ikons are carried high and then lowered nearly to the ground. Finally, nearing dawn, the chanting ceases to be a monotonous refrain and the priests, with extreme excitement, rush around the tents three times, brandishing the ikons in front of the closed doors. Suddenly these doors are opened and the priests, with the ikons held high, rush into the church. The Ethiopian monks follow, and the Easter service begins.

Ancient Feast of Eggs

The custom of eating eggs during the feast comes down from the ancient days of the Egyptians, who, in the worship of the generations of life, saw in the egg the symbol of the beginning of life. The ancient Greeks and Romans also had the custom of eating them. They gave new meaning to the symbol of life and they used it in their festivals. The Persians used it in the spring festival of the year, which continued for seven days. The Persians would present colored eggs to their friends as tokens of the renewal of life. The Christians took this custom from the heathen nations. The first Christians were in the habit of coloring eggs red and using them in their festivals. Those eggs were kept from the Thursday before Easter, which was called Maundy Thursday, because on that day Jesus washed the feet of his disciples. Maundy is a corruption of the word mandate, which is the first word in the Latin version of the text, "A mandatum novum do vobis," "A new commandment I give unto you."

Skeletons of Nine Men Are Found in Icy Cave

Sandpoint, Idaho.—Skeletons of nine men, victims of an unrecognized mine gang, are known with the discovery of their bones in a cave in the Cabinet mountains, it was announced here by Coroner Ray Smith. Smith said the bones were found in a cave in the Montana section of the Cabinet mountains.

The story dates back to John T. Allen, one of the pioneer hard miners of the Pacific Northwest, who, according to legend, was murdered with small fortune in gold dust in his possession. Allen, it is said, was on his way to Spokane from Montana when he was killed.

Months later the bodies were found on the eastern slope. No motive for the murders appears to have been the gold dust, however, but from the circumstances surrounding the discovery of the bodies, Smith believes the victims were killed by members of a mine gang.

Sandpoint, Idaho.—Coroner Ray Smith's announcement that the cause of death of nine men whose bones were found in a cave in the Cabinet mountains was due to natural causes has ended the search for the slayer of the victims, it was learned here today.

Shakespeare Was Not Dead, Says Author

Shakespeare was not dead, but was living in Stratford-on-Avon, England, when the first folio of his plays was published in 1623, Dr. Frank Harris, author, declared in a lecture here.

Harris said he had found the name of Shakespeare in the records of Stratford-on-Avon, and that the poet was living there when the first folio was published.

Harris declared that Shakespeare's plays were written by the poet himself, and not by Francis Bacon, as some persons have claimed.

Services on Mount Rubidoux

The Easter sunrise services on Mount Rubidoux have been revived to appropriate have been initiated all over the world. But still thousands of pilgrims representing almost every creed and almost every race journey to the top of this rugged western peak every year and participate in simple Christian services. These services have surprising vitality. The first sunrise was begun in 1911. The Spanish people of the San Jacinto mountain top at that time had a custom of Easter. With the coming of spring they assembled for services nightly at sunrise or dawn.

AND STILL IT RISES

During 1930 five times were appreciably greater than in 1929. And if the present trend continues, 1931 will register another major advance. According to the bulletin issued by Fire Underwriters the loss for January totaled $44,000,000—an increase of $17,000,411 over the same month last year.

At a time when business depression and unemployment are two paramount issues, the tragedy of fire becomes more than ordinarily apparent. We use both scientific structure to replace the one burned—but we cannot compensate for the opportunities for lost jobs for the business theory fire necessary to introduce a wreck into the wheels of progress.

The United States has proven itself to be particularly cautious to fire. It laments the waste of life in conflagration and discovers a "Fire Prevention Week"—but the suggestion to combat cause instead of effect will be forgotten in the hurry before we can observe its one day of grace. As a result of this expense, the world must fire protection a reality instead of a hope.

TOO MUCH LAW MEANS TOO MUCH LAW-BREAKING

In discussing the public attitude in this country for trying to remedy all problems by the passage of a new law, by the enforcement of which the regulatory board is inundated to by handing out public funds to all endeavor to furnish one group of citizens at the public expense, a keen student of economic affairs recently said:

"We allow disappointments in economic adjustments to develop into serious situations, we become disgusted with futile attempts at remedy-fashions of different sorts, and we finally accept that other alternative of organization which is the creation of a superior force on governmental parties which leads only to bad habits in special privilege, judicial interpretation and economic distress with all its consequent hardships and fears. And the end of the beginning knows. We found patterns, and much fortitude to undo the stupidity of the past."

MORE ROAD FOR LESS MONEY

The organized farmers of the United States have, for several years, been making a drive to obtain good roads for themselves. They have pointed out that at present less than five per cent of farmers have access to roads that can be relied upon at all times of the year and under all conditions.

On the other hand, motor-expenditures have been increased by engineering, and businesses and citizens including farmers, are seeking ways to curtail gasoline consumption.

Under modern conditions, two traffic lanes are necessary. The problem is, then, how to get more road for less money. This, according to Thomas H. Gray of the Asphalt Institute, can be achieved by the use of low cost local materials—gravel, sand, stone, etc.—mixed with asphalt. Information on it is true that experiments along this line have been made, but much more remains to be done. Those have been much more thought and money done with the exception of a steadily increasing battery of laws, coincident with a steady gain in crime. The professional reformer has been blamed for this—and justly—but the rest of us must share the blame with him.

Crime will continue to be an unmitigated pest and menace to society and we will deal with it only as we would any other national affliction.

THE GREAT AMERICAN BUREAUCRACY

Advocates of government ownership and operation of our great service industries should read an article in the February issue of the Atlantic Monthly which reeks of the great American bureaucracy.

The government at Washington is already wasting millions annually on duplication, spending behind millions of dollars a year How much of that money is given for which course purposes, or wasted through inefficiency and red tape, is almost impossible to estimate. There are no accounting of costs, if the business mind of the world if more money is handed, the treasury is there to supply it. A private business, operated in such a manner, would soon be in bankrupt in a month.

The time of the motor bus as a favored form of transportation can be said to be ended as a commercial enterprise. If current low prices of gasoline and motor oil continue to be the order of the day, the motor bus will be largely paid for by the public.

The coming of the bus has naturally dealt with the inception of any new and important service. Industry—given time to overcome problems. But this has gradually been solved, and the bus is adjusting itself to its place as a valuable adjunct of our national transportation system.

CRIME IS NO DIFFERENT

It might be a good idea to abandon in some one or no problem by the method now ordinarily used to solve any other economic, social and industrial problem.

Take prohibition, as soon as they appear, are given the attention of logical, scientific minds, and in addition to the facts and figures presented. They are investigated, fully and impartially. The necessary data is collected. The various factors are defined, weighed, considered. And then, and only then, in the proper atmosphere, pro and taken, and corrective measures applied.

The last business depression is a good example. All the greatest financial experts, important executives of trade and industry, so many millions of economic authorities, is busy giving us their efforts to finding a means of preventing unemployment and maintaining wages and living standards.

In contrast to this one last month—the powers of public, have been apathetic in the matter of crime, except in a comparatively few cases. Crime is a problem, with both social and economic causes. These has been much talk, some thought, and nothing done,

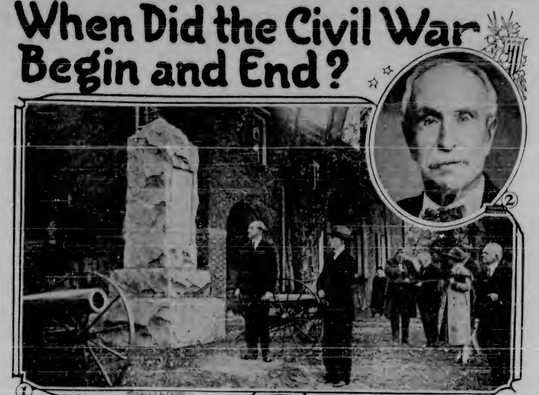
When Did the Civil War Begin and End?



BY ELMO SCOTT WATSON

I WAS just seventy years ago, on April 12, 1861, that the Confederate batteries in the harbor of Charleston, S. C., opened fire on Fort Sumter, compelled the United States troops commanded by Maj. Robert Anderson, and thus commenced the events in the consolidation of Franklin Abraham Lincoln, according to the idea of some Americans marked the beginning of the Civil war. But it may well be argued that the Civil war began a year before that date.

Many a superstitious statistician has said that the war actually began during the administration of President James Buchanan, when the 500 months and was about four years before the inauguration of Lincoln. Buchanan, however, did not regard the secession movement as the beginning of war. He declared in his message to congress, December 3, 1861, at the date of the opening of the War between the States:

As preliminary for that view of the matter consider this statement I wrote shortly the first anniversary story, on which the Public provided on December 20, 1860, and the same officials immediately demanded that the United States troops be withdrawn from Fort Sumter. Buchanan refused. Anderson was ordered by his military commander, Gen. Scott, to move his troops from Fort Moultrie, commanded by Major Anderson, to Fort Sumter, on Sumter harbor on January 1, but was prevented by the Confederates. Several efforts to provision Fort Sumter were made by the United States government, but were unsuccessful. On January 9, 1861, a steamer, the Star of the West, attempted to enter Charleston harbor on January 9, but was fired upon by the batteries of Morris island and Fort Sumter and compelled to turn back. The vessel was under fire for seventeen hours, but it was not struck. Buchanan declared that the United States troops be withdrawn from Fort Sumter, and the same officials immediately demanded

Time for the hymn will be taken from each speaker's time and at the singing of these hymns all will depart and enter or leave.

The Young People's Society will conduct a "Service" at 8:15 Sunday morning. The public is invited.

A Cathedral Hour service will be held Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock. At this service the annual choirs will render the sacred cantata, "Behold the Victor," by Dudley Buck. The public is not only invited but urged to attend.

There will be no Young People's Service at either church Easter Sunday because of the cantata.

We wish to take this opportunity of thanking the business people of Charlevoix for their kind co-operation in closing their places of business, on our Good Friday program.

"Reality" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Christian Science churches on Sunday, March 29.

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "I know that, whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor anything taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before him" (Ecclesiastes 3:14).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "There is but one eternal cause. Therefore there can be no effect from any other cause, and these can be no reality in aught which does not proceed from the great and only cause" (p. 287).

The Men's Club after holding a series of meetings at regular intervals during the winter months held their last meeting of the season Monday night at the M. E. church as has been the custom since the first inception of the organization. The attendance at the last meeting was good and appreciated favorably with the previous meetings. Of course this meeting was favored with the usual good feed, some good short talks and a fine time pronounced a success. There is every evidence that the club will be revived with the approach of the 1931 winter season.

Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Young of Boyne City, were business visitors here yesterday.

H. W. Garrett of Grand Rapids made one of his periodical visits to Charlevoix Wednesday.

Dr. R. E. Crane of Traverse City was a Charlevoix visitor Wednesday primarily for the purpose of determining the advisability of opening an office in connection with his visits on behalf of Osteopathic Physicians and Surgeons.

CAR'S INTERIOR ATTRACTS WOMEN

Upholstery May Enhance Comfort, Smartness and Ultimate Value of Car.

WHEN it comes to selecting the upholstery materials for a car, preference is that adopted by the sight-seery American tourist who set to its interior which feels cool to the next important attachment. They do the inside and 'I' do the outside." The average woman is quite content to have her husband concern himself with the body of the car, the wheels and general mechanics, provided she may have something to say about the inside. The car's clothing, as its upholstery may well be called, is regarded as important with the rest of the car, but upon it depends much of its comfort, smartness, beauty and ultimate value in trade.

In choosing the upholstery for the interior, a number of distinct features should be considered—good appearance, smart design, pleasing color, wearing quality, tidying comfort, cleanliness and economy. The only material that can be depended on to embrace these important features in one fabric is velvet mohair; otherwise known as velvon, and made from the lustrous fleece of the Angora goat. Because of its original mossy wilderness, mohair can be dyed any shade, however subtle, its lustrous sheen and soft, silky texture leave nothing to be desired in the way of beauty and luxurious appearance, while the long wearing quality of pile mohair, as contrasted with that of flat fabrics, is unequaled. A velvon upholstered car will be fresh and inviting long after the rest of the car has lost its good appearance or even gives itself up in the form of rags. Because of the smooth surface of individual mohair fibres, dissimilar only under a microscope, dirt does not readily adhere to nor penetrate them, and the material is easily cleaned with a whisk-broom or vacuum. Actual grease or dirt spots are removed by washing with pure soap and warm water.

Every riding car upholstered with mohair velvet bespeaks there is no skimping on driving ease, as with tension fabrics and each flow of the pile fabric acts as a resilient spring to absorb shocks. It is easier on the eyes, too, as the reduced friction avoids nodding and drowsiness sometimes.

Added to these advantages is the additional one that they all add materially to the future value of the car when the time comes to get a new one, fact, it has been conservatively estimated that anywhere from $50 to one hundred dollars difference can be looked for in a car whose upholstery is in perfect condition and in tiring to the eye.

Offer Prize for Oldest Piece of Mohair

Have you a mohair-covered chair or sofa in your home? If so, you may be $250 the richer for it.

This paper is in receipt of a message from the Hotchkiss Fibre Brush Company, asking for help in locating the oldest piece of mohair upholstering furniture in the United States. In addition to the search for furniture, the age of mohair as the greatest fiber are not important, providing it is in good condition. Its owner will be awarded $250, and the piece must be established with other old time facts during the World's Fair in 1933.

Back of the suggestion is one to prove for ascertain the longevity of mohair. If it outlasts flat unless could certainly indicate its lustrous use as well found of a similar wearing through.

Readers with fact that load have something of interest should communicate with Mrs. Ayra at the Hotchkiss Brush Company, 7 South Desplaines street, Chicago, giving the history of the piece in mind.

BEAVER ISLAND NOTES

Eddie B. Gallagher returned home from Grand Rapids last week.

Mrs. Hannah T. Gallagher who has been quite ill at her home in Pealer township, is improving slowly.

The worst storm of the season hit Beaver Island Friday, Saturday and Sunday, giving us a big fall of snow. The mail plane came over Saturday and was forced to stay over until Monday. The harbor is again filled with floating ice, preventing the fishing boats from going in or out.

A large number of relatives and friends were gathered at the home of Capt. and Mrs. Chas Allers Monday, March 30th, the occasion being Mrs. Allers' 73rd birthday anniversary. The evening was spent playing cards, singing old songs and reciting poems. A delightful lunch was served after which the guests departed, all expressing their enjoyment of the evening and wishing Mrs. Allers many happy years of the day.

The freighter "Rambler" is fitted out ready to start the season. Her first trip will be to Charlevoix for gasoline and other supplies.

GOOD LOCAL VOTE MONDAY

CHANGES FEW IN CITY OFFICERS; INTEREST SHOWN

Charlevoix voters, women and men, were more than usually interested in the general election held Monday and as a result a majority of them waited the hours and cast their ballots for city, county and state officers as well as expressing their opinion relative to a move favoring the constitution and referendum measure.

There was no contest relative to city affairs. With but one ticket in the field and all candidates proposed there was no opportunity to create excitement. Nearly everyone voted the city ticket straight. Occasionally some voter scratched a name off the ballot, probably for some personal reason, but such ballots were rare.

In the county house there was a big change, Edward Brothers, 2; Oakley Saunders, 2; George Maggison, 3; H. C. Newman, 3; Lee Sneathen, 3; Richard Paddock, 3; Mrs. Orson Cook, 3; W. E. Straw, 3; Charles Withers, 3.

Supervisors from East Jordan are L. V. Liskum, 1; James Nicol, 1; Albert Gould, 1; Earl Bricker, 1; Harry Daugherty, 1; Lindsley Larson, 1; Mark Saunders, 2; Ole Omlaud, 2; Ray Loomis, 2; Art Nicloy, 2; Walter Hosmer, 2; Robert Sherman, 2; George Nelson, 2; Orval Bennett, 2; Douglas Thkittle, 3; Dan Swanson, 3. Those from Boyne City are Clifford Peck, 1; Mrs. Lewis Lochman, 1; Tracy LaCross, 1; Roy Hardy, 2; Albert Barkke, 2; H. R. Somerville, 2; Harry Behling, 3; Howard Stephens, 3; Clyde Clute, 3; Bert Lumley, 3. Robert Tarnow, 3. Mrs. T. J. Smith, 3. From Bay Shore, Mrs. Henry Kortlnee, 3; Mrs. T. J. Smith, 3. S. S. SANFORD TO ST. JAMES MAKES INITIAL TRIP OF THE SEASON WEDNESDAY.

For several days prior to making the first trip to St. James this season the S. S. Sanford was ready to start on its initial run over the route. The steamer had passed Inspection Bros under her bellies, steam up and her crew "rarin'" to go. But ice blocked the St. James harbor, heavy ice, such as the ship could not buck with safety, hence the delay. This ice, some ice that had drifted in from the straits region, completely blocked the entrance to the local harbor at frequent intervals for several days. Shifting with the wind, some days at the entrance to the harbor and on other days some distance out in Lake Michigan.

Wednesday morning the S. S. Sanford sailed from this port for St. James upon receipt of information that the St. James harbor was open.

POLAR BEARS TRIM BELLAIRE

DAVENPORT, BROWN, AND KIPKE STAR IN 36-29 WIN

The Polar Bears were victorious in their last home game of the season last Thursday evening when they followed the fast-travelling Bellaire Independents to the tune of a 36-29 score.

Manager Todd started the following line-up: Fusanda, Davenport and Higman; Center, Brown, and Gurede, Kipke and V. Smith, who was playing his first game with this team. Later in the game Ikens was substituted for Higman, and still later Supernaw took V. Smith's place, and J. Smith, the former Cub star, replaced Ikens.

In the first quarter there was quite a mixup due to the fact that both teams wore the same color suits, but Charlevoix proved superior in dribbling through, etc., and so was ahead 7 to 4 at the end of the quarter. Teamwork was not highly stressed as the players could not tell whether they were throwing to a Charlevoix or Bellaire man.

Charlevoix then changed to white suits, and the spectators were able to tell who was who after that, although there were a number of times when the players on the local team, accustomed to wearing red, would throw the ball to a Bellaire man. This accounted for the fact that Bellaire scored 15 points to 7 in the second round, and the score was tied 14 and 14 at the half.

Charlevoix became accustomed to the white shirts in the third quarter, and you should have seen them "click" or "pitch", as the collegians say, after that. The Polar Bears scored 14 points to 7 in the third set-to, and 10 to 8 in the final

Charlevoix really played just as good in the final round as in the third, but the substitutes who were playing had not had time to get their shooting straightened out and therefore missed a few baskets, which they would normally have made.

Brown led the scoring with 14 points, closely followed by Davenport with 13 markers, Kipke made 8 Ikens 2, and Higman 1.

The preliminary game was between two groups of small boys, the final score being 6-5 in favor of the "outs." The kids showed a pretty good knowledge of the game and the scrap was entertaining to the audience as it was a little out of the ordinary.

The 28 points the Polar Bears scored in their game is the highest they have gone all year. To date they have played a total of 16 games, winning 12 and losing 4. On foreign floors they played 5 games, winning 3 and losing 2. On the home court they have played 11 games, winning 9 and losing 2. It is not such a bad record, considering that they have been willing to meet all comers, either at home or abroad.

The Polar Bears will play a game tonight with the Petoskey Ben-Ton team, the leaders in Petoskey's League. Tuesday the Polar Bears defeated the Ben-Tons 18-10 on the Petoskey floor and the Ben-Tons will probably be thirsting for revenge. The preliminary game tonight will be an exhibition of indoor baseball. The local team will engage the Petoskey organization. The two baseball teams played at Petoskey Tuesday night and the decision went to Petoskey by a 17 to 7 score. There is a chance that Charlevoix can reverse the decision tonight.

REGULAR COMMUNICATION

The next regular communication of Charlevoix Lodge, No. 282, F. & A. M., will be held at the Masonic temple Tuesday night, April 14th. Following the regular order of business work will be conducted in the E. A. degree.

The fire department was called to the residence of Rev. W. H. Rauch Saturday afternoon, where a fire was discovered on the roof of the building. Sunday night the department made a trip to the lakeshore home where another roof fire had started. Both houses are located on Antrim street. Damage in each case was small.

Dr. R. B. Armstrong was a guest of his daughters, Mrs. George Wentz and Miss Helen Armstrong and also had a visit with his son R. B., Jr. in Chicago for several days recently. Dr. Armstrong returned home Thursday.

The adjourned meeting of the Lady Maccabees will be held Wednesday night, April 15, with the meeting at Mrs. O. D. Hammonds. All members please be present.

Miss Maggie Culler, a guest of friends in Detroit for two weeks, returned home Saturday.

DEATH TAKES MRS. E. A. SONNEMAN

Mrs. Ernst A. Sonnemann, 501 Wilcoxsky avenue, well known resident of this city, died at 1:15 p. m. today at Detroit, Mich., at the home of her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. George Stevenson, with whom she had been passing the winter months. Death was due to heart trouble.

Mrs. Sonnemann, who was sixty-five years of age, lived in Sheboygan the greater part of her life. She has six counties number of friends who will mourn her death.

Her husband who preceded her in death in November, 1927, was a pioneer Sheboygan fisherman and was prominently known as a member of the Sheboygan common council and the Wisconsin state legislature, which he served for two terms. One son, Harvey, also preceded her in death.

The survivors are one daughter, Mrs. George Stevenson, of Detroit, Mich., formerly of this city, and a granddaughter, Zara Stevenson.

The body will be brought to this city for burial. Complete funeral arrangements will be announced later.

The above is from a Milwaukee paper issue of March 24th. Mrs. Sonnemann with her family, in years past, was a frequent summer visitor here and will be remembered by persons residing in Charlevoix in earlier years.

LEGIONAIRES HOLD MEET

LEGION MEMBERS HOLD MEETING FIRST IN THEIR NEW HOME TUESDAY NIGHT

Leslie Shapton Post of the American Legion held its regular weekly meeting at the new club house on East Garfield Avenue, Tuesday evening, with twenty-two members in attendance.

Plans were laid for the Memorial Day exercises and the preliminary sales of poppies that precede it. A portion of the receipts from these poppy sales goes to the ex-service men now in hospitals throughout the country who manufacture the artificial paper flowers. A committee of six, with Sam King as chairman, was appointed to arrange the details of the exercises. Ex-service men who are not provided with the legion forage caps are requested to communicate at once with Charles Hamlin, secretary of the Post, so that they may be ordered immediately in time for Memorial Day. Give your hat size.

Following the business session, cards and a series of snappy ping pong contests carried on the meeting to an adjournment in the wee sma' hours. A satisfying luncheon of coffee, rye bread, liverwurst and doughnuts was consumed during this period.

Next Tuesday evening, at eight o'clock, a stag card party will be held at the club rooms. Each member is expected to bring three friends, who, with himself will each be assessed a nominal sum for the post treasury. He is also supposed to bring a table, cards and such other equipment, such as score pads, etc., according to the game that he and his guests desire to play.

LOCAL GIRL IS COLLEGE WORKER

GETS RECOGNITION IN ORGANIZATION ON CAMPUS

East Lansing, Mich., April 4—Miss Dorothy Withers of Charlevoix has been identified as influential in organizing the Spartan Women's League, a new group on Michigan State campus that promises to set a precedent in co-ordinating all phases of co-ed activity, by virtue of her keen interest in promoting the projects undertaken by that body during the past month.

Miss Withers is one of the 250 co-eds to become affiliated with the League since its existence this term. Outstanding among the activities of the group has been an act of participation in co-ed athletics, where many prizes were won, and a formal dance which was a decided success. Other undertakings of the League have been a membership drive and several teas.

The primary purpose of the organization as set down by the leaders of the movement is to create leadership among unorganized girls, to enter teams in competitive athletic sports, to develop a strong bond of friendship among college women, and to provide a common meeting place for sorority and non-sorority co-eds.

Ira A. Adams was a business visitor at Bellaire last Saturday.

CONSERVATION DEPT. REPORT

FEBRUARY "SAFEST" MONTH FOR MICHIGAN WILD LIFE

February is the "safest" month for wild life in Michigan.

This is the conclusion drawn from reports of the Law Enforcement Division of the Department of Conservation listing conservation law violations by months over an extended period.

During February each year the list of convictions for game law infractions reaches its lowest ebb, according to the Law Enforcement Division. During that month practically all game birds and animals and fish are protected from hunters and anglers, a fact that also served to make law enforcement easier since possession of a gun in the fields or woods and without permits, generally means violation of the law.

During February this year 142 convictions were reported by the Department. This was compared with 202 convictions in January, and 360 convictions in December. During February 1930 the Division reported 199 violations.

The 142 conservation law violations in February paid fines and costs totaling $3,381.65 or an average of $23.81 each. They also served a total of 675 days in jail, a figure averaging almost 100 per cent higher than a year ago. The reason for this is believed to be the fact that more committees have been frequently forced violators to take the alternative jail sentence, being unable to pay the assessed fines and costs.

There was no outstanding number of violations of any particular statute, conservation laws during February. Four were sentenced for illegal possession of trout and five for illegal possession of black bass. Two were convicted of spearing black bass and several convictions were reported for possession of undersized perch.

Seven men and one woman were sentenced in February for illegal possession of venison. Four were convicted of various violations of the hunting and fishing license law.

While the average penalty inflicted on violators did not run higher than in other months, several severe sentences were reported for individual cases. Three upper peninsula men, convicted of the illegal possession of venison were sentenced to pay fines of $100.50 each and to serve 30 days each in the county jail.

A Gladwin County man was sentenced to 30 days in jail for killing minnows from a trout stream, and an Antrim County man was fined $100 to serve 30 days in jail for taking trout during the closed season.

Fines, costs and other charges amounting to $170.75 in each case were inflicted on two men arrested in Kalamazoo County and convicted of perjury by taking out resident deer licenses, they being nonresidents of the state. The sentences of these two men represented the limit of the above named penalties in Kalamazoo County since the repeal of the 1930 deer season.

Dumping refuse in an inland lake resulted in fines of $50.25 each for two Lake County men and a Barry County man served five days in jail for interfering with the work of an officer.

One muskrat coat Julius Plotz, Bay County, a $50 fine, court costs of $11.50 and a jail sentence of 60 days. Plotz was convicted of taking the muskrat during the closed season.

No juveniles were included in the list of convictions for February.

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS ATTENTION REQUESTED

Members of the K. of P. order at Central Lake and East Jordan lodges are coming to Charlevoix tonight Thursday, April 9th, where they will be dinner guests of the local order at 6:30 o'clock, after which they will contest for honors at exemplar.

Present information is to the effect that there will be a large delegation present from each of the visiting lodges, therefore it is desirable that those who will be in charge of the supper be notified in order that they may be properly prepared to serve.

Among the visitors expected are Grand Chancellor Sir Knight Frank Hall, of Detroit, who is a candidate for re-election at Grand Rapids in May, and Grand Vice Supreme Master Wm. E. Grace, also a well known politician, both of whom will be present and are worth while meeting.

The public is invited to be present at the meeting.

CAR STOLEN SUNDAY A. M.

RECOVERED AT ROGERS CITY TUESDAY MORNING

Burt Hammonds automobile was driven away from the parking space near the Hotel Charlevoix at an early hour Sunday morning and was found in Rogers City Tuesday morning by Sheriff Ernest Cook. The car was stolen by the lone who is in the hotel when he started away. Later the owner of the car found a few cents change in the car and a few cents stamps and another machine, "Bud" got in touch with the sheriff and the car was found. Under test of a lie detector machine Burt Hammonds admitted that he stole the car. He pleaded guilty to the charge before Justice Sherman Sunday morning and was fined $100 and costs, which he paid. He was then released.

A wedding of interest to many friends in this vicinity was solemnized at the M. E. parsonage in Boyne City on Saturday, March 28th, when Miss Ruth Bennett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Orval Bennett of this city, became the bride of Mr. Lloyd Hosmer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hosmer of Boyne City. Rev. Wm. Lockyer performed the ceremony in the presence of a few relatives and friends. The bride was attired in a navy blue suit with accessories to match. Following the ceremony a wedding dinner was served at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Orval Bennett, after which the young couple left on a short honeymoon trip. Upon their return they will reside on a farm near Boyne City. The bride is a graduate of the local high school and has been employed at the Citizens Telephone office for the past few years. The groom is a graduate of the Boyne City high school and is employed at the Boyne City Gas Co. office. Both have many friends who extend congratulations and best wishes.

WEDDING AT SEA IN "MONEY IS VERY PRETTY RITE"

One of the most romantic and unusual weddings ever performed took place last summer on board the steamship Europa, when Miss Lucy Mellon, daughter of Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, was married to Count Alexander Laszlo, Hungarian diplomat.

The ceremony was performed by the captain of the ship, Commander Ludwig Von Schiller, in the presence of the bridegroom's parents, Count and Countess Laszlo, and Barbara Hutton, daughter of Mrs. Edward F. Hutton, who was a friend of the bride's. The bride was given away by her father, Mr. Mellon.

The ceremony took place in the ship's dining saloon, which was decorated in all the customary shades of the sea. It lasted but a few minutes.

A wedding breakfast followed the ceremony, and the bridal party remained on deck for the remainder of the voyage.

During the voyage the bride received many gifts from ship to ship and radiograms from all parts of the world. Among the latter were messages from Mrs. Hoover, Mrs. Coolidge and Mrs. Dwight Morrow.

The bridegroom's parents were landed from ship to ship and radiograms from all parts of the world. Among the latter were messages from Mrs. Hoover, Mrs. Coolidge and Mrs. Dwight Morrow.

WILL H. SEE FORMER MEMBER OF LOCAL ORDER

I was interested to see in your last issue that Will H. See, formerly of this city, was to be raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason on the evening of April 7th, in Portland, Oregon, and am personally acquainted with Will and his father. Mr. See was a member of Charlevoix Masonic lodge for a number of years, and I was made a Master Mason in Charlevoix lodge, No. 282, F. & A. M.

Will is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Charlevoix, A. D. See, of Washington, D. C. Will graduated from the Charlevoix high school and was employed in the office of the Michigan Fuel & Power Co. in this city for a number of years. He left Charlevoix for Oregon for the benefit of his health and was employed by the Portland Railway Light & Power Co. for a number of years. He is now employed by the Portland Gas & Coke Co. in the capacity of chief engineer.

Will is married and has a family of two children, a boy and a girl. The boy is now a student at Reed College, Portland, Oregon, and is a member of the Phi Gamma Delta fraternity. The daughter is a student at the Portland high school.

Will is a member of the Shrine, Consistory and Blue Lodge, Portland, Oregon, and I have been informed that he is a member of the Portland Chamber of Commerce.

Will has been employed by the Portland Gas & Coke Co. for a number of years and is now chief engineer of the plant.

Will H. See,
Portland, Oregon.

Richard Lewis and A. S. Rogers of East Jordan were business visitors in Charlevoix Thursday.

Mrs. Dwight McGeary of Flint arrived here Wednesday to visit her father Mr. Joseph A. Cooper, and other relatives and friends and family number.

Gunnation, the first personal as to the whereabouts of the machine. Upon receipt of the information Bud Gunnation proceeded to Rogers City to recover the machine.

Mr. Hammond informed from Hingham, Penn. that the car which was not recovered. Lemuel and Bud found the machine was abandoned near Rogers City, when the gas tank was empty.

He also reports that the party taking his machine had failed to Atlanta where he left another car, but had captured before he could make his get away.

Mrs. and Father and I returned home last night I was raised by took me to see a small Masonic pin, with a square and compass, and gave it to me.

I shall keep the pin and prize it; having my most cherished memento.

CAR STOLEN SUNDAY A. M.

RECOVERED AT ROGERS CITY TUESDAY MORNING

Burt Hammonds automobile was driven away from the parking space near the Hotel Charlevoix at an early hour Sunday morning and was found in Rogers City Tuesday morning by Sheriff Ernest Cook. The car was stolen by the lone who is in the hotel when he started away. Later the owner of the car found a few cents change in the car and a few cents stamps and another machine, "Bud" got in touch with the sheriff and the car was found. Under test of a lie detector machine Burt Hammonds admitted that he stole the car. He pleaded guilty to the charge before Justice Sherman Sunday morning and was fined $100

The Boyhood of Famous Americans

By F. V. Fitzgerald

Patrick E. Crowley

Cattaraugus was a railroad town on the Erie line. It was the ambition of every boy in town to become a railroader when he grew up. Some wanted to be engineers, others firemen or brakemen in work clothes and stained overalls was a reason big enough sight to the boys themselves. Still it always gave them a thrill. They hoped to rise that high in the world themselves some day in the future.

Patrick E. Crowley shared the ambition of his playmates to become a first-class railroad man. He was born in a house near the tracks of the Erie in 1864. His father had worked on the line for years. He was the station agent at Cattaraugus and as such was a man of authority and prestige in the little community. By the time he was fifteen he was a full fledged operator.

Most boys would have gone to bed as soon as they arrived home from such a hard day's work as this youngster put in. But not young Crowley. He was a great reader of history and railroad books dealing with railroad problems, rather he found no peace of mind until midnight or later in this way he combined the education that was lacking, so far as school was concerned, when he finished his grammar school course.

Long before he was able to vote he was known as a boy who always sat up on the job who studied it thoroughly until he knew his particular work better than anyone else. It wasn't an exaggeration to say of him, that when he put his mind to it he became an expert telegrapher at the age of sixteen.

The Erie sent him to Custer City, Pa., as telegraph operator. There were only a couple of trains a day at the little way station, but it was a start for the big. He didn't remain there long. Soon he was transferred to Buffalo and became a train dispatcher at an important point.

He continued to be a wide reader of good literature in his spare moments burning the midnight oil to improve his mind. He worked as hard as he had done on his first job. He was gaining a thorough foundation in railroading. He went with the New York Central in 1890 as a train dispatcher. Next he became chief of the department and then chief train master. He was already a man marked for promotion.

When he was offered the place of superintendent of the Pennsylvania division of the Central system, he refused it at first. He was so modest he didn't think he deserved such an important post. Friends persuaded him to change his mind.

From then on his promotion was steady and sure until he was named president of the vast Central system. His thoroughness in mastering every job as it came along has paid him and the New York Central big dividends.

SUCH IS LIFE—The Gay Gadabouts

By Charles Sughroe

"Con Men" in Detroit Begin Career Early

Detroit—Two eight-year-old "confidence men" neither of whom was distinguished by the stickers on his pinkish nose, caught the prevailing mania among their playmates lately and began to police by being confidence men themselves. The son of Robert Wellman, seven and a trusted weight of 52 pounds, is about that far.

As a result of the trickery the eight-year-olds have $5, good for an evening at any moving picture theater in any neighborhood. Robert is the one hundred pound, seven-year-old son of Mrs. Mildred Grenell, and Mrs. Grenell is the one who is terribly complaining over apparent and disappointed visit.

To trace the legend of "the deal" in the beginning one must start with the Grenell family who live next door to the Wellmans. Mrs. Allen went to see Mrs. Grenell on some business, and Mrs. Grenell was unable to obtain a sitter. Robert, who is the only child in the household, was left to his own devices.

Later came the shock. The young Mr. Wellman was outside the house when a gentleman in a touring car stopped and asked if Mrs. Grenell lived there. The gentleman, in holiday attire, had just run up for the Detroit-Notre Dame football game. He had a little time to kill before the game started, and he was interested to hear other members of the family, so he assured the "smooth talker" will be glad to see him. Robert, one of those children to be seen, not heard, was unable to resist the flattering invitation, and conducted the visitor to the following effect:

"Dimmed up," muttered the flustered Mrs. Grenell, "and I was going right over."

"Yes, sir," added the cream of the matter. "They are good boys a great deal."

"Yeah, right, me friend," Mr. Allen

CAPONS USUALLY HIGHER PRICED

Operation Is Favored When Cockerels Cannot Be Sold.

The production of capons is a good practice for poultry flock owners, according to Oliver N. Sunnoers, extension specialist of the University of Wyoming, as capons usually bring higher prices than other classes of poultry.

Surplus cockerels should be caponized (1) when cockerels cannot be sold to good advantage as broilers, (2) when a supply of "soft" killed chickens is desired later, (3) cockerels are sometimes caponized when natural browns are used for breeding because most capons (Leghorns and such crossed) will breed chickens as well as a hen.

The unsexing of cockerels is simple and easy and leaves no ugly and thick scar that may be found in hens. Caponizing is best done when the birds are from 2 to 5 per cent, though, of course, the methods again conditions are the same. Under normal the cockerels have been starved to-fore the operation, the experience of the specialist says.

Though the increases in size or weight of a capon over a cockerel is considerable, it is not as great as is commonly supposed, the specialist says, being about one-fifth. However, this increase in weight is worth while, because the appearance of a capon is quiet and peaceful, and he gives a superior meat quality and tenderness. Because of the market preference for capons and the higher prices they bring, the difference in weight is more than offset by the higher prices.

Caponizing is a simple matter and can be done by the poultry flock owner. Complete directions are given in Farmers' Bulletin 1045, "Caponizing," which may be obtained by writing to the Department of Agriculture at Washington.

Stratton's Boy

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

I was over at Stratton's town making a speech or doing some other ineffective thing when I had a call from Stratton, whom I had known slightly in junior days and later. If I would not come out to his fashionable place and see him. he would be and a boy about whom he wanted to talk to me.

Stratton has had a dramatic and an erratic career. He started business merce more than any energies taken by his doctor. Mr. Tuttle and Mr. Stratton was without to send him to a hospital, but he insisted that he felt a lot better and that all he needed was a little food. So they saw that he got that, and then went along to their dinner.

But, before they parted from the man, there was something that Tuttle very wished to know. I might say that he has one of the keenest pair of blue eyes I ever saw in stock. Not much gets past them.

"When you fell," he said, "your right hand relaxed, and something dropped from it. What was it?"

Hopkins grinned. He put his hand in his pocket and brought out a small object. It was a golf ball.

"What about me do with Carola?" asked Smith-Beresford.

"Better take him along. He can guide us over the hills and get us there quicker."

The Mexican rode in front of them. He was covered by his own rifle in the hands of Smith-Beresford. He cunningly he led them through a maze of hilltops.

"Quantrell must have left the horses somewhere," O'Hara told his partner.

Identify Dead Hobo as Nephew of Poet Heine

Bridgeport, The Poet Hilton reports that an old friendly who was found dead on the railroad near the village of Wyndgate in southeast Texas, has been identified as the brother of Heinrich Heine, the poet.

The hobo had been buried several days when he later been identified several mail-flights, had been destitute for months and reported himself on foot from Kansas to Bohemia, where he died from hunger and exposure.

Comfort and inference are cruelties.

The world is growing rather tedious nowadays, but we never will run short of it.

Chemists Seeking Future Uses for Coal

Washington.—Despite widespread use of water power, petroleum and other sources of energy, coal still remains the richer source of steam and steam-electric power.

Such is the conclusion of H. M. Hoer, author of a study issued by the Department of Commerce. His findings are based on technological processes of control which have taken place in the and that foreign nations are now making efforts to produce enough coal to meet their own demands.

"Technology of the utilization of coal," Hoer declared, "has advanced more rapidly in the last few years than at any time in the history. Liquefied fuel has been made from coal, also gaseous fuel from coal or from oil; also in Germany, Soviet Russia and Italy extensive researches have been made in the production of synthetic liquid fuels from coal.

"Some of the developments. Hoer points out, have resulted in new methods of coal combining industries. The by-product coke oven, for example, have been enabled to subdue the ability and willingness to spend money. Stratton spoke.

I had heard something of the boy, too. He had been in a half dozen secondary schools from some of which he had withdrawn voluntarily because the management was not to his liking and from others he had secured his release at the urgent request of the authorities in charge.

He is unusually fine looking, with a pleasing personality, and a manner that would make him a good salesman. He is a born.

"He calls it go to college," Stratton concluded to me, "but I haven't the least idea what he will do when he gets there. He's never worked in high school, and I'm afraid he won't when he gets to college.

"Maybe he'll work, though," I said, more encouragingly.

"I'm going to be frank with you," Stratton went on. "His habits are bad. He runs around with a wild set of young people and his course home is often so late that he is napping before able to engage anything. The staff that drink now is going, you know that. He has been pretty much of a drunkard other night. In a really the first time in 5 years. I've had to speak to him pretty thoroughly about it. I think maybe I'll get to him soon."

"The boy has excellent stuff but I am going a pretty rough path for coach. I think he was the first time that the father had had any success talk with the boy. I've been extraordinarily to both.

Other information as to the time to examine the specimens is given announcing to age at size, but it is more destructive than the stage of development he has chosen. Conference of the United States and the country's level food of feeding animal animals.

While a large amount of coal will continue to be used for the generation of fuel and power, Hoer declares, the trend is toward the use in the future will be found in its by-products, which are the basis of the almost unique of chemistry and in the chemical industries.

Ancestors Fix Pullets' Worth in Laying Flock

A long effort is been with a certain chicken to find out whether or not it is worth keeping. Prof. L. M. Hurd of the New York State College of Agriculture is advising flock owners to buy chicks only from flocks that have been found free of bugs. If any question in flock management is in existence as according to the outstanding flock profits.

He uses the records of two flocks at the Cornell University experiment station that he is using in his studies. The flocks were pleased that a small number of eggs from each hen. The records are kept by the college in all over the United States. Fortunately, he was a real success effort. A breed of sheep was selected for fertility, they were the best known ones took part on the average 200 eggs each.

Both flocks were of the same age and were grown and handled the same way. Each pullet was given a leg band with a record of eggs for each hen. The records are kept by the college in to test flocks relay disease free and laying-qualities of chicks. Other recommendations and suggestions for producing better pullets are available from your county agricultural agent or from the poultry department at the College of Agriculture at Illinois.

Confine Stale Birds

What kind of a hen are you going to take to market this summer? You can do a lot to keep up the summer demand for eggs if you will give them to the farm. Be sure the hens have plenty of fresh water, well-filled with litter. One man for every five or six pullets, to gather the eggs twice a day. Shut up the small and broken eggs, and keep them in a cool place. Dirty eggs were sold. Store the eggs in a cool cellar if possible.

Mites Cut Output

Get after the red mites in the henhouse before they cause a drop in egg production. Mites are very active and become too numerous in the time to treat the roosts and other parts of the house.

Hot weather is most favorable to the reproduction of the mites and they multiply very rapidly. Lice usually a failing off in egg production. These mites are also known as harmful to the fowls which live on the body of the hen all the time.

Discard Old Rooster

After the first month or two every one should plan to "scat the old rooster" and make room out of him or sell him to some poultry dealer who will put him on the market and let somebody else make show. Unless this old bird is of special breeding and outstanding value he should be sold at once and let you produce good infertile eggs for the market.

It is those fertile eggs which cause so much trouble and which lose the confidence of the dealer.

The ship-to-shore telephone was caused, to be a success. One of the experts in the laboratory on the Lehigh has been making successful tests and says that 70 per cent of the calls get prompt and clear service. section 30-mins do not appear to affect conversation. The rest is 821 for three minutes and if the connection is not clear no charge is made. Now that it has been proved at the experience of talking to the Lehigh has been made to the public at all over the United States. Fortunately, he was a real success effort. A breed of sheep was selected for fertility, they were the best known ones took part on the average 200 eggs each.

THE STORY

Garrett O'Hara, young lawyer, on his way to practice at Cimarin, wife western town, is met at Trail Junction by 22-22 Henderson who warns him that Judge Lester, who controls the county seat, is in with a group of hostile cattlemen. Among these is Jim Henderson, who through the shot was disabled at bad wants Garrett will to go to Cimarin because of the big cattle war. Bruce Worrell tells Garrett about the cattle war between Ingram and Blackfoot Cattle Raiser Baldwin. Garrett decides to go to Cimarin, where he meets Worrell's niece, Dorothy Baldwin, daughter of Blackfoot Baldwin. Garrett meets Ingram's foreman, Steve Quantrell, and the Englishman for a ranch in the Cimarin country. Jim Peters, Ingram's foreman, tells Garrett that Ingram's cattle have been stolen by Baldwin's men. Garrett is hired by Ingram, the experience of the specialist are.

Continuing, Hoer said that the average of 3 years over a cockerel is unconsiderable. It is not as great as is commonly supposed, however, it being about one-fifth. "Joan says they came down from the rim rock in foot. Likely they left some one with the mounts. Hadn't we better swing around that way and see if he's still there?"

"Old Tep. Old Top. He could give us the latest developments. It would be deemed awkward if we met Ingram's men before we did our own."

They skirted the edge of the park. Garrie pulled up to listen. Hiding a band for silence. Some one was riding toward them. They could hear the hoofs of horses striking rocks.

Ridiculous horses came to the brow of a hill. Behind them rode a single man. The man was Joe son of Steve Ingram's foreman. At sight of Garrett and the others he stopped and shouted promptly, giving a spur for flight.

O'Hara called to him by name. Joe looked his head to his kind foot, we sharply did he check it.

The Circle S-O partners joined him Joe made clear the situation.

"The bars are in the stable. One of 'em is wounded. Looks like."

"How there been a lot of shooting?" Smith-Beresford asked.

"Quite a bit. Some one rode away from the ranch hour an' a half ago, some for help. I was on guard in the horses. Figured they might come back to get me. So they got around to it."

The partners talked together and afterward O'Hara gave Joe instructions. "Well, Joan, here with you. Hold him till we see you again. It's about half an hour movie the ranch. We'll ride to the meadow to the place where the creek runs out. We're going to try to follow the creek through the willows to the stable. We'll take a bell horse along for the wounded man. If our plan works you will join us soon as come."

"What if I'm jumped by Ingram or some one else?"

"Then you'll have to hold 'em back the best you can. Shoot if you have to. Only don't let them get away before night."

The partners rode back to the creek, by way of the park rim, dropping down to the meadow and over a low ridge. Smith-Beresford carried the rifle. O'Hara led the extra horse. They moved up the creek, keeping in the shelter of the willows and using the willows as a screen.

"Cut for the Creek an' Get Across It," Tex Jim Advised.

Quantrell was disgusted. "You spilled the beans proper, Mac. We had three of his sitter an' we didn't get a one. Oh, well, us men ain't afraid of work. Come on here before they get them up an' get us."

He slid down into a brushy draw, rein through it, and emerged into the open. Straight for the stable he ran, leaning low in the saddle. Behind him came Smith-Beresford with rifle ready.

Quantrell and down on a ford box and cursed bitterly and directly. The object of his malediction was the party of Hopkins at the ranch house. The adventure he had planned and had paid gone wrong. Hopkins his party belonged in the stable. two out of the six wounded, a seventh separated from them by a stretch of four hundred yards into open ground have been miles, and the horses quite out of reach. Quantrell did not need anyone to tell him that he was ruined. He had blundered in charging down the hill. He had only himself to blame like a fool boy.

All firing had ceased. Those at the ranch house made no immediate attempt to assault the invaders. Presently Whitey made an experimental venture. "Father just got on a horse the other side the house an' rode off."

"Done to let Ingram know," Texas Jim guessed.

"An' after a while Dave will be back here with a whole passle of warriors," Scammers added.

"Will be a mouthful of thunderation, looks like," Steve said.

"Two never can tell till you're out. Only don't you bring that on me," Quantrell contributed bitterly. "But some of you fellows have got to stay when you're ready to go. Me, I'm staying."

Texas Jim nodded. "Sure here," he said tersely.

The deputy sheriff said nothing. In his opinion this enterprise was gone to smoke hell think about now.

Quantrell's good humor came to him good opportunity came to get out with a whole skin he intended to do it.

During the next hour or two there was desultory firing on both sides, though it was plain that the men in the ranch house were waiting for reinforcements before they forced the fighting.

"Couple fellows on horses comin' through the willows," announced the white-headed cowboy abruptly.

Quantrell grabbed his rifle and went to the door. What he saw was still too far away to tell. Two men were riding along the edge of the creek among the willows. They led with them a led horse.

"Bad guns my skin if it ain't the belted ear! an' his friend the good man," exclaimed Texas Jim excitedly. "What in Mexico are they doin' here?"

The young desperado laughed, his voice when he spoke filled with joy and careless mirth. "Where else would they be? Don't they always lead straight for trouble, these lads?"

A moment, and O'Hara and his partner were in the stable.

The hills that fenced in the park grew closer. Now far ahead was the cleft through which ran the creek into the horses galloped. They passed to a bunch-grass field beyond which was a gulch.

At the upper end of this they found the rest of their party. With them were Joe and the horses he had brought to the rendezvous.

Gwen, his face drained of blood, looked like a man ready to collapse and seemed only by a resolute will.

"Can you go on?" O'Hara asked him.

Both of his hands clung to the saddle horn. He nodded, not trusting the energy to answer in words.

"We'll try to make the Circle S-O," O'Hara said. "It's less than four miles by the map."

He rode on one side of Gwen, Quantrell on the other. Jim, dismounted and Texas Jim brought up the rear, watchful for the appearance of enemies.

The deputy sheriff and Joe rode in the van of the procession. Joe was an old timer and picked with a sure eye the easiest way across the hills in the dark.

Gwen surrounded within sight of the ranch, slipping from the saddle into O'Hara's arms. One of the men rode forward at a gallop and brought back the information that it was Alfred Gerson. The three natives friends Garrett had made between Encinos and Gerson's ranch, the experience of the specialist are.

Continuing, Hoer said that the average of 3 years over a cockerel is unconsiderable. It is not as great as is commonly supposed, however, it being about one-fifth. However, this increase in weight is worth while, because the appearance of a capon is quiet and peaceful, and he gives a superior meat quality and tenderness. Because of the market preference for capons and the higher prices they bring, the difference in weight is more than offset by the higher prices.

Caponizing is a simple matter and can be done by the poultry flock owner. Complete directions are given in Farmers' Bulletin 1045, "Caponizing," which may be obtained by writing to the Department of Agriculture at Washington.

"Joan says they came down from the rim rock in foot. Likely they left some one with the mounts. Hadn't we better swing around that way and see if he's still there?"

"Old Tep. Old Top. He could give us the latest developments. It would be deemed awkward if we met Ingram's men before we did our own."

They skirted the edge of the park. Garrie pulled up to listen. Hiding a band for silence. Some one was riding toward them. They could hear the hoofs of horses striking rocks.

Ridiculous horses came to the brow of a hill. Behind them rode a single man. The man was Joe son of Steve Ingram's foreman. At sight of Garrett and the others he stopped and shouted promptly, giving a spur for flight.

O'Hara called to him by name. Joe looked his head to his kind foot, we sharply did he check it.

The Circle S-O partners joined him Joe made clear the situation.

"The bars are in the stable. One of 'em is wounded. Looks like."

"How there been a lot of shooting?" Smith-Beresford asked.

"Quite a bit. Some one rode away from the ranch hour an' a half ago, some for help. I was on guard in the horses. Figured they might come back to get me. So they got around to it."

The partners talked together and afterward O'Hara gave Joe instructions. "Well, Joan, here with you. Hold him till we see you again. It's about half an hour movie the ranch. We'll ride to the meadow to the place where the creek runs out. We're going to try to follow the creek through the willows to the stable. We'll take a bell horse along for the wounded man. If our plan works you will join us soon as come."

"What if I'm jumped by Ingram or some one else?"

"Then you'll have to hold 'em back the best you can. Shoot if you have to. Only don't let them get away before night."

The partners rode back to the creek, by way of the park rim, dropping down to the meadow and over a low ridge. Smith-Beresford carried the rifle. O'Hara led the extra horse. They moved up the creek, keeping in the shelter of the willows and using the willows as a screen.

"Cut for the Creek an' Get Across It," Tex Jim Advised.

Quantrell was disgusted. "You spilled the beans proper, Mac. We had three of his sitter an' we didn't get a one. Oh, well, us men ain't afraid of work. Come on here before they get them up an' get us."

He slid down into a brushy draw, rein through it, and emerged into the open. Straight for the stable he ran, leaning low in the saddle. Behind him came Smith-Beresford with rifle ready.

Quantrell and down on a ford box and cursed bitterly and directly. The object of his malediction was the party of Hopkins at the ranch house. The adventure he had planned and had paid gone wrong. Hopkins his party belonged in the stable. two out of the six wounded, a seventh separated from them by a stretch of four hundred yards into open ground have been miles, and the horses quite out of reach. Quantrell did not need anyone to tell him that he was ruined. He had blundered in charging down the hill. He had only himself to blame like a fool boy.

All firing had ceased. Those at the ranch house made no immediate attempt to assault the invaders. Presently Whitey made an experimental venture. "Father just got on a horse the other side the house an' rode off."

"Done to let Ingram know," Texas Jim guessed.

"An' after a while Dave will be back here with a whole passle of warriors," Scammers added.

"Will be a mouthful of thunderation, looks like," Steve said.

"Two never can tell till you're out. Only don't you bring that on me," Quantrell contributed bitterly. "But some of you fellows have got to stay when you're ready to go. Me, I'm staying."

Texas Jim nodded. "Sure here," he said tersely.

The deputy sheriff said nothing. In his opinion this enterprise was gone to smoke hell think about now.

Quantrell's good humor came to him good opportunity came to get out with a whole skin he intended to do it.

During the next hour or two there was desultory firing on both sides, though it was plain that the men in the ranch house were waiting for reinforcements before they forced the fighting.

"Couple fellows on horses comin' through the willows," announced the white-headed cowboy abruptly.

Quantrell grabbed his rifle and went to the door. What he saw was still too far away to tell. Two men were riding along the edge of the creek among the willows. They led with them a led horse.

"Bad guns my skin if it ain't the belted ear! an' his friend the good man," exclaimed Texas Jim excitedly. "What in Mexico are they doin' here?"

The young desperado laughed, his voice when he spoke filled with joy and careless mirth. "Where else would they be? Don't they always lead straight for trouble, these lads?"

A moment, and O'Hara and his partner were in the stable.

* * * * * * *

The Circle S-O partners consulted with each other.

"Nothing to do but ride over to the Hughes ranch and call off the flesh-hunting dogs. If they've got Ingram's men penned up we'll probably be in line," O'Hara said.

"What about we do with Carola?" asked Smith-Beresford.

"Better take him along. He can guide us over the hills and get us there quicker."

The Mexican rode in front of them. He was covered by his own rifle in the hands of Smith-Beresford. Unerringly he led them through a maze of hilltops.

"Quantrell must have left the horses somewhere," O'Hara told his partner.

Raising Pop Corn May Be Overdone

As a Result of Attractive Prices Interest Is Gaining Momentum.

Interest in the United States Department of Agriculture in pop corn growing is increasing.

Indications now point to the possibility that pop corn growing may be overdone in 1931, say specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture. Pop corn prices, they point out, are very sensitive to supply, and price depressions due to overproduction have occurred in the past. After a few years of fairly normal production, if a short crop occurs as the result of unfavorable weather or other causes, the price rises to a figure attractive to growers. Immediately many new producers appear who flood the market with disastrous effects to the old growers as well as to themselves.

Healthful high nutrient values for pop corn and low prices for it can be combined to make pop corn utilize a desirable crop says specialists of the bureau of home industry. Many recipes, current correspondence they say, many old economy are explaining their attempt and others, of the methods of the specialists. Readers are planning to substitute pop corn for part of their food now according.

Interest Gains Momentum.

The present interest in pop corn has been growing momentum for some years, say specialists, at one time prices, particularly the unhulled kernels, would have gone still lower before now, but the weather of 1930 conspired to reduce the yields of pop corn as well as of feed corn and so put off the day of price readjustment. Stocks of old pop corn were well cleaned up during the winter of 1929-30 and prices rose considerably. In response to this economic movement was expected in 1930 the effect was offset, so the specialists point out, by the fact that they are still relatively high as compared with field corn, the specialists point out.

What is happening may be illustrated by the situation in Iowa, they say, which is the leading state in the production of commercial pop corn. In 1929 Iowa furnished her pop corn acreage to nearly twice that of 1928 and nearly three times that of 1927. If, instead of her last annual crop of 450,000 acres, the weather had been such that the same acreage as that of 1927 would have produced a crop of similar size, approximately 1,350,000 acres would have been harvested for the market, and overproduction such as that of 1925 would have resulted.

Pop Corn Acreage.

The pop corn acreage of the United States is also small, amounting to but 1 per cent of the total corn acreage, the specialists in charge point out. Although the commercial growing of pop corn is concentrated in a few states to a considerable extent, much of the land held in the hunt for pop corn is not suitable for growing pop corn. It can be appreciated, therefore, they say, that the acreage of this crop can easily be overexpanded.

If the present interest in pop corn by the consumer with the relatively high prices at present, as compared with other grains, may lead to the production of too much pop corn in the fall of the year, it is feared. It may be well for those who are planning to increase pop corn acreage and materially for those planning to grow pop corn for the first time, to consider the situation thoroughly before increasing too deeply, the bureau warns.

Bacterial Blight Most Important Bean Disease

Developments of bean varieties resistant to bacterial blight promise to be the most promising contrast for the disease, according to W. J. Zimmerly, assistant pathologist in the United States Department of Agriculture, who has been conducting investigations of this disease. The results of his findings are published in circular No. 157, entitled "Bacterial Blight of Beans," issued by the United States Department of Agriculture.

The bacterial blight of beans caused by Bacterium Phaseoli.

Near its anthracnose, says Doctor Zimmerly, bacterial blight is the most important disease of beans with the exception of rust, and occurs annually a quarter million bushels. Losses in very bad seasons have run as high as 75 per cent of the crop and in isolated instances and in particularly bad years complete destruction of a field is not uncommon.

In field tests to varieties showed complete resistance the rudbor mark, although four varieties of the Refugee type showed a very low degree of susceptibility. All other varieties tested showed moderate or very slight resistance.

Wind-Vane Insect Trap Aids Control Beet Pest

A new wind-vane insect trap devised by entomologists of the United States Department of Agriculture is proving useful in determining the source of beet-leaf hopper migrations, the department reports. Once the source of infestation is known, it may be possible to apply direct control measures before the insects migrate to the sugar-beet fields, if the natural breeding area be small.

The new trap consists of a light wooden bar bearing a series of panel-like upright screens, connected by a funnel with a jar containing cyanide. A weather vane attached to the bar causes it to rotate so that it always faces the wind. The traps are mounted on high poles.

Insects flying with the prevailing winds are caught by the screens and carried by air currents down a tube, through the funnel, and into the jar of poison. By examining the jar at regular intervals entomologists can tell which winds bring the insects at what height they are flying, and the extent of the flight.

GRAY WITH NAVY IS SMART COLOR SCHEME FOR PRINTS

One spots of a garden the prints which have well-known look. In the first place, their color schemes are so entirely different. There's something strikingly original in the absence of gray with navy, with black with green and with brown which occurs in the ready new prints. This presence of gray is made an outstanding feature throughout the print projects for spring and summer.

Then, too, there is a charm and a simplicity of design about this new

HISTORY REPEATS ITSELF

Writing of the colonization of Virginia in 1613, John Marshall said: "Heretofore no separate property had been acquired and no individual had labored for himself. The lands had been held, cleared, and cultivated in common, and their produce carried in to a common granary. . . . Industry deprived of the fair reward, for its sufficient stimulus to exertion, and the public supplies were generally inadequate to the public necessities. To remove this cause of perpetual anarchy Sir Thomas Dale divided a sufficient portion of land into lots of three acres, and granted one of them in full property to each individual. . . . Industry impelled by the certainty of recompense, advanced with rapid strides, and the inhabitants were no longer in fear of sparing bread, either for themselves, or for the immigrants from England."

Now a print dispatch from Russia, where the communistic system has been in effect, says, "A new proposal to emphasize the dignity of hardy those who don't eat" was presented today to the Moscow congress. . . . Under the new scheme the commissariat of agriculture and the most difficult question—equalization of labor—would be solved, it was offered by introduction of the "piece work" system in more than 80,000 collectives. The standard of wages will be fixed in either money or commodities as the man who works hard will receive more than the man who does not."

The moral is that economic laws are fixed and unchangeable. Even the country which is carrying on the greatest socialistic experiment in history cannot do away with the urge which has been a part of human nature since the dawn of civilization to reap the reward of one's own industry and ability.

SAFETY FIRST CAMPAIGN SHOWS RESULTS

During 1920 ten states conducted Save-A-Life motor vehicle inspection campaigns, close to 2,500,000 cars were examined as to brakes, lights, horns, steering mechanisms and the like. More than a million of them had defective brakes, another half had unsafe headlights, 210,000 had defective steering, and thousands more had other defects of similar importance. The Lansby equipment was corrected, with the result that during the month in which the campaign took place and the month following, most of the states enjoyed a decrease in accidents.

The value of inspections, like the value of laws requiring examination of drivers, is not open to doubt. There is every reason to believe that a large proportion of automobiles on the highways are defective, and that brakes, steering or lights might fail in an emergency.

The value of the most hopeful sign in the automobile accident from amount at present is the vast amount and scientific attention being given to the problem. The entire nation is observing those states which, in spite of a rising national accident record, are showing definitive and immediate. The year future should bring us a long way toward solving the highway accident problem.

ARE MOTHERS TOO BUSY?

With all the labor-saving devices of the modern home, and with all the conveniences which have been made possible by Burbie Eugenie Leonard's gathering several hundred pints, between the ages of 11 and 19. Barely half the girls said that they would like to be housekeepers when they left school. A fourth of those who said "wonderful school God" had never learned their mothers about Him. Many and they would not let their mothers know if they smoked. A considerable number of girls were not friendly to their mothers then personal triumphs or school activities which most interest them.

Mothers hinder confidence, Dmitry Leonard learned from the girls, in several ways—by emotional outbreaks such as nagging, yelling and weeping, by the habit of making fun of misunderstanding, by laying stress on blame or guilt, or by sheer lack of interest.

Most striking of all, however, is the assertion that "nearly every girl confided was hampered by how busy her mother was." A discerning editor who analyzes the statistics adds this comment: "What a pity it is that our civilization has become so complicated that even in a daughter's estimation of interagency or bewilderment, less to pride, a modern mother is more likely than not to be 'too busy.'"

SOUND PUBLIC POLICY NEEDED

In a recent address Melvin A. Traylor President of the First National Bank of Chicago, pointed out the strong connection that exists between general prosperity and the electric industry, and the need for a sound policy for controlling the relationship of government and business.

The electric industry has more than twelve billion dollars invested in plant and equipment, it spends a billion dollars a year for new development, it serves 45,000,000 people in electrically-lighted homes, it provides livelihood for two million American men. Anything that impairs the financial progress of this industry is unethical to the country's welfare.

It is certainly true that in these times that representatives of both governments and business of all shades of opinion, seek to formulate a program for the future. Political attacks against the electric industry, or against any other great business are the stuff on which depression thrives.

No matter what one's economic and moral principles and beliefs may be, it is an unarguable fact that the future of the nation will largely depend upon the relationship between the government and these industries which, because of the character of the services they sell are regulated by the people.

"SAVING" THAT IS RUINOUS "ECONOMY"

A primary reason for the magnificent prosperity experienced in history cannot do away with the urge which has been a part of human nature since the dawn of civilization to reap the reward of one's own industry and ability.

TIME TO STOP ADVERTISING

The Lake City (Minn.) Graphic-Republican says:

"To the business man who thinks the public does not need to be constantly reminded of who he is and what he has to sell, the often told story of Pyle's Peatline will bear repeating.

"In 1904 Peatline, a cleaning substance, was used by a large percentage of the housewives of the country, and the company spent $500,000 in advertising that year.

"Later the advertising was curtailed, and about 1907 it was discontinued altogether, as the company thought the product so well-known that it did not require further advertising.

"Sales fell off rapidly, but the owners persisted in their non-advertising policy until 1915, when the new owners, including good will, was sold for $75,000. Peatline was dead.

"Many other products whose names were household words a few years ago are not heard of today because they failed to keep up their advertising and consequently the public forgot them.

"Business men must remember that new generations are coming along all the time, and those new buyers must be personally sold on a product or a store, as their fathers and mothers were just before them. The only time it is safe to stop advertising is when one is ready to go out of business."

CONSUMPTION OF CHEESE CONTINUES TO INCREASE

Among the American industries that have found no occasion to complain about either their statistical showing or their profits in the past few years is that which has to do with the manufacture and sale of cheese. In the last decade the increase has been felt by almost every line of business, it has continued to forge ahead.

Figures just made available by the Bureau of Agriculture show that in 1920 over 45,000,000 pounds of cheese was consumed in this country than in 1919. While official Government figures for 1920 are not yet available, leaders in the industry are confident that the increase in cheese use will continue and, what is more to the point, are laying their lines to care for it. They believe, and with good reason, that a substantial rate of increase may be maintained indefinitely. This is the way J. L. Kraft, Chicago, analyzes the situation:

"The consumption of cheese in the United States for 1920 was the highest ever recorded—was only 4.62 pounds per capita. United States Government figures do not include cream cheese or cottage cheese. If the consumption of these two items, which are growing in popularity, were added to the Government records, the consumption would be substantially higher. In Switzerland the per capita consumption was 23 pounds; in Holland and France 13.5 pounds; in Germany 9.5 pounds and in England nine pounds. A vast majority of the people of the United States are descended from nationalities that are large consumers of cheese and we are at present conducting an extensive educational campaign of advertising on its value as a food for all occasions. We believe, naturally, that the per capita consumption in this country will increase steadily.

"Sales for 1920 and for January of this year have been quite satisfactory and we have made plans for the largest advertising campaign in our history in anticipation of further increases in cheese consumption.

"We feel that to a great extent the recent gratifying increase of the cheese industry in America is due to extensive and well planned educational advertising. Methods of manufacture have advanced immeasurably during the last decade, but the story of this improvement, of the many uses of cheese, and of its food value, as told on the printed page, has also been a potent factor in the steady increase in domestic consumption."

BUS COMPETITION HITS RAILROADS

Bankers Association President Asks If Unfair Aid Is Given Motorized Transport— For Rail Mergers.

NEW YORK.—Fair treatment for the railroads in respect to highway motor competition was called for by Rome C. Stephenson, President American Bankers Association, in a recent address here. He also strongly endorsed "sound economic railway consolidation" and pointed to state control over the railroads as the solution.

"I have very strongly of the opinion that one of the measures which would help materially to put back business where it ought to be is the limitless forwarding plan of railroad consolidation as announced recently following negotiations instituted by President Hoover," said Mr. Stephenson. "Its adoption by the Interstate Commerce Commission would tend to stabilize the transportation industry. Its ultimate operation would be a favorable influence on business in general.

"It is a fact well known to business leaders that our railroads are now facing a crisis. Not only do they need immediate help in some competitive situations arising from increased use of our highways and waterways as well as other carriers, but they need uniformity such as the proposed forwarding plan provides. Our President has stated emphatically his opposition to this respect and his move deserves the support of every clear-thinking citizen.

Mr. Stephenson declared that the railroads had a right to expect that, superficially well that we are prone in our public affairs to rely too much on dependence upon them and our obligations to them. The past, present and destiny of the United States is inseparably bound up with their welfare. It is essential, just considerations for them we are even more solicitor of the public best economic interests of the nation.

A Question of Public Interest

"We are confronted with the question as to how much more the public economic interest will stand as invasion of the welfare of the railroads by private forces and competitors of their own granted and not within the scope of their own unaided powers to combat, said Mr. Stephenson. Unfair especially is one competitions that are unfavorable to the railroads, not only with the aid of natural economic forces but also through the aid of government policies which, positively or negatively, tend to give these competitors undue advantages over the railroads.

"It goes without saying that the railroads have no right, nor wish to do so far as I have been able to discern, to oppose highway improvement in the field of transportation, for the public is entitled to the best possible transportation that can be had. The railroads but equally does it go without saying that the railroads are entitled to be given by using, or by failure to use, the taxing power of government to create competitive methods of transportation that, while they could not continue to do so unaided private enterprises, particularly when such action impairs the value of property in good faith invested means of our people in established enterprises that are serving the public well."

Mr. Stephenson said it was not his purpose to argue against such competition transportation as the highway passenger motorbus and motor truck as such, when conducted under proper regulations and in keeping with public welfare and benefit. He declared, however, that the railroads should have consideration whether such competition is being developed under conditions that are unfair to the railroads, because either the contract or charges or of the regulations, or of unlawful economic factor in that competition.

Would Investigate Bus Trade

Railroad rights of way, he declared, represent tremendous capital investments, on which the railroads must also bear very current costs to meet. "They pay every day a million dollars in taxes and most of this is on the rights of way," he said. "Also they spend daily over two million dollars additional for the proper maintenance of the way." He asserted that the motorbuses have not had to pay for their rights of way in any sense that the railroads paid for theirs.

"They have simply taken possession of public highways built by public funds, both state and national," he continued, "and they have extensively made those highways vastly less comfortable, less safe and less serviceable for private motorists and others who are contributing chiefly to their creation and maintenance."

Mr. Stephenson declared that all these matters should be thoroughly inquired into by competent public bodies, both state and national, with a view of determining the equities and the public economic interests involved, "particularly in respect to their effects upon the nation's railroads.

"I venture to say," he added, "that such inquiries would show whether it is to the public interest to let things remain as they are, whether the situation calls for a new basis of motorbus and truck taxes to satisfy the equities of the case and whether it would call for such drastic action as the exclusion of this traffic from our public general highways and the requirement, even as the railways, it provide as a part of its own private capital investment its own rights of way and for its own maintenance of way out of operating income."

OLDEST FORD DRIVER

J. M. Crow, 89, of Ethel, Miss., the oldest Ford driver in Mississippi, traversed the historic old Natchez Trace in a covered wagon eighty-seven years ago.

As rugged today at 89 as the age in American history he so picturesquely typifies, J. M. Crow of Ethel, Miss., is the oldest Ford driver in Mississippi and one of the oldest in the United States.

When as a babe of two years he rode with his parents in one of a train of 23 covered wagons out of Union county, Georgia, into Mississippi, the old Natchez Trace followed by the brave little band was still infested by the swashbuckling outlaws whose bloody outrages gave that era its place in this country's history as "the outlaw years."

One of his vivid memories is tearful as a boy of six, the news of General Scott's victorious assault on the heights of Chapultepec which ended the Mexican War in 1847, and his South Arm—Against, 132; for, 50.

Total Against, 765; total for, 219.

Thus it will be seen that a majority of the voters of the county have by their ballots decided that Charlevoix is a more suitable place for the county seat than Boyne Falls.

Every effort has been put forth by the friends of Boyne Falls to secure an affirmative result; our sister village of Boyne City threw her influence against us; logging camps were emptied and rides driven bought in the polls, to increase their vote and throw confusion into the camp of its Primitives at Charlevoix.

The vote of what are termed the outlying townships, such a few votes in central townships, has emphatically decided in favor of Charlevoix remaining the county seat.

President Nichols and Supt. Marshall left yesterday morning for New York to buy a new engine and dynamo for the electric light plant. It cost, will be about $7,000.

Work began yesterday on the Standard Oil Company's new station in this place. It is located on the railroad near Stover's mill and is being built under the direction of Brown Bros., the company's agents here.

The years pass and the birthdays come, some in a cloud of sorrow and some in a sunshine of happiness, but all as reminders of the flight of time. The editor of this paper was a certain number of full years older last Thursday than he ever was before, or will be again; the precaution of an Irish bull. The editor filled an appointment that evening and arrived at his home in time to receive the members of the S. S. S. and several honorary members, among whom were Judge Sharpe and Frank Searle. Col. Wickham and the postmaster, F. D. Mosely, arrived just behind the editor. Anyone who knows Capta. Bing Pinaran, Pete Campbell and Oscar Wilbur will understand that a good time followed. After lunch Col. Wickham arose and poured a fifteen minute speech into the editor and with a gift of flowers from himself, presented the scribe, on behalf of the party, a fine editorial chair with two rests to Bank Rooms for the spring rest and one for the delinquent subscriber. The editor was very full that night—full of oysters, salad and gratitude—gratitude for the good friends who came to greet him, and for their good opinion. The occasion was a very enjoyable one for all concerned.

On Monday the tug Seaker went out to her nets. On her return in the evening she found a large field of ice in the bay, in which she got stuck in an effort to get through it. A number of other vessels came down from the front-strengthened ice, and reported a shortage of provisions. The life saving crew, dragging a boat with them went out with supplies, breaking through the ice several times. Well-handed and well constructed.

Distinct Communities

Since settlement of the Antrim-Iron-District Natchez and Natchez Under the-Hill have been distinct and separate communities, perhaps more so than river rats lived "under the hill," with their more fortunate brothers and maid pastoral associates on the majestic bluffs above. Natchez-Under-the-Hill was for the wicked.

Natchez-on-the-Hill was the abode of the aristocracy. Rather picturesque distinctions were drawn between the two. The folk, but even today the atmosphere of the Natchez-Under-the-Hill district is different from that of the more staid and respectable Natchez-on-the-Hill.

Town Meeting in Charlevoix

Town meeting in Charlevoix was noisy but harmonious. An unusually large poll was polled. One-third of one per cent was voted to be raised for highway purposes. Cattle, geese, sheep and hogs must be kept off from December 1st to April 1st, and horses and mules the entire year. A. E. Mason was elected overseer of highways and John Bill pound master.

County seat controversies are proverbial and vindictive, but we think that the one just closed in this county has been conducted in a manner calm and dispassionate, when compared with those of our neighbors in northern Michigan. The partisans in either village have done all in their power to secure a result for their respect. As towns, and both have done what they considered right in their own interests. Now that the fight is over, we should have used all harmonize and to have kept in line. Now is the time to get back to the land of the controversy, harsh words have been spoken, they are unlike the healing up of the imperfections of human nature and should be seen forgotten. Now, until the next time of this question, let us bury the hatchet and live in peace with each other.

THE COUNTY SEAT

A Good Majority in Favor of Keeping It At Charlevoix

The largest vote ever polled in Charlevoix County was rolled out Monday on the question of the removal of the county seat to Boyne Falls.

The result as shown by the returns of seven townships, giving the entire voting eight all that can be claimed in favor of Boyne Falls, shows a clear majority of not far from two hundred in favor of Charlevoix. The following are the returns as far as heard from:

Boyne Lake—Against removal, 56; for, 11.

Charlevoix—Against, 192.

Norwood—Against, 59.

Hayes—Against, 121; for, 1.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By Frank P. Litschert

Something of the instability of European affairs is evidenced by the political stir which was caused all over the continent by the mere announcement that Germany and Austria had completed a customs agreement for the elimination of trade barriers between the two nations. In spite of the fact that assurances were given that each nation was to retain its political independence and that other nations would be invited to join the union, the air became thick with protests and there was a revival of war talk and political sanctions.

France and some of her allies immediately asserted that the Germans were seeking to swallow up Austria and make that country merely a vassal part of the Reich, that the Teutons were seeking to break the Versailles treaty, and that something would have to be done about it at once to prevent serious trouble. Germans for the minority proposed by those who oppose the Austro-German economic agreement regard of the way from referring the matter to the council of the League, up to taking stern and ready measures against the two countries.

One point to be emphasized in the controversy is that for years Europe has been talking about a United States of Europe in a political sense, and a breaking down of trade barriers which would prevent a smooth flow of commerce between the various European nations and help put Europe on the road to economic prosperity. It was averred that existing would help to restore peace and prosperity among the nations as a lowering of European trade barriers, and that skilful French diplomat, M. Briand, would be instantly highest in his rights of way," he said. "Also they spend daily over two million dollars additional for the proper maintenance of the way." He asserted that the motorbuses have not had to pay for their rights of way in any sense that the railroads paid for theirs.

"They have simply taken possession of public highways built by public funds, both state and national," he continued, "and they have extensively made those highways vastly less comfortable, less safe and less serviceable for private motorists and others who are contributing chiefly to their creation and maintenance."

Mr. Stephenson declared that all these matters should be thoroughly inquired into by competent public bodies, both state and national, with a view of determining the equities and the public economic interests involved, "particularly in respect to their effects upon the nation's railroads.

"I venture to say," he added, "that such inquiries would show whether it is to the public interest to let things remain as they are, whether the situation calls for a new basis of motorbus and truck taxes to satisfy the equities of the case and whether it would call for such drastic action as the exclusion of this traffic from our public general highways and the requirement, even as the railways, it provide as a part of its own private capital investment its own rights of way and for its own maintenance of way out of operating income."

To make mushroom sauce for steak, wash a pound of fresh mushrooms, separate the caps from the stems, and cut into pieces. Cook in 2 tablespoons of butter in a covered pan five to ten minutes at moderate heat. Season and serve with steak. Canned mushrooms may be used.

Unbleached sheeting makes excellent slip-on covers for mattresses.

There is another reason why a general European customs agreement is essential at this time, and that is that Europe must present a united front if she is to be able to cope with the question of Russian dumping, which has already disturbed economic stability everywhere. Therefore it would seem that the best thing to do would be for the nations agreement annulled into between Germany and Austria, pan-European in scope.

It is not to be expected, however, that this will happen. It would be too much to expect of European statesmen, who never seem happy unless engaged in a quarrel of some sort. It is far more likely that the suspicions will continue and that there will be a continuance of the present disorganization of Europe. The latest development, however, once more emphasizes the importance of Uncle Sam's keeping out of the League of Nations and its ramifications. We do not want to be placed in a position where our representative at Geneva would be called on to vote in any question concerning European customs agreements. We have enough trouble to look after our own economic affairs.

THE COUNTY SEAT

A Good Majority in Favor of Keeping It At Charlevoix

The largest vote ever polled in Charlevoix County was rolled out Monday on the question of the removal of the county seat to Boyne Falls.

The result as shown by the returns of seven townships, giving the entire voting eight all that can be claimed in favor of Boyne Falls, shows a clear majority of not far from two hundred in favor of Charlevoix. The following are the returns as far as heard from:

Boyne Lake—Against removal, 56; for, 11.

Hayes—Against, 121; for, 1.

South Arm—Against, 132; for, 50.

Marion—Against, 74.

Evelina—Against, 160; for, 5.

Melrose—For, 35.

Evangeline—Against, 4; for, 148.

Total Against, 765; total for, 219.

Thus it will be seen that a majority of the voters of the county have by their ballots decided that Charlevoix is a more suitable place for the county seat than Boyne Falls.

Every effort has been put forth by the friends of Boyne Falls to secure an affirmative result; our sister village of Boyne City threw her influence against us; logging camps were emptied and rides driven bought in the polls, to increase their vote and throw confusion into the camp of its Primitives at Charlevoix.

The vote of what are termed the outlying townships, such a few votes in central townships, has emphatically decided in favor of Charlevoix remaining the county seat.

Alaskan Fox Farmers Expect 30,000 Crop

Ketchikan, Alaska.—Harvest time for in blue fox; summary of all furs is near; on more than 200 islands off the coast of Alaska and in the Aleutian group fox farmers expect to reap the fruits of many years careful breeding of the rare semi-polar animals.

The blue fox is one of the rarer species as the white fox. They are both Arctic foxes, the only difference being the color pleases.

The first recorded efforts to raise blue foxes in Alaska was as early as 1880. Several were taken from Pribilof Islands to Kodiak and turned loose on other rocky islets. About that interest was further revived and since then the industry has developed rapidly until nearly all the islands suitable for furs are occupied.

It is estimated there are more than 100,000 blue foxes on the Alaska fox islands, of which nearly one-third are to be pelted this autumn.

At recent fur sales in Seattle blue fox skins averaged $144.50 each and specimen sold as high as $240 each. Alaska blue fox farmers expect to realize about $75 each average as furs on their fine big crop of skins this year.

Peiping, China.—One of the sudden sights in Peiping—that of nearly pulling rickshas—will disappear in the near future, if a municipal regulation just imposed is enforced. The regulation forbids boys under eighteen years old from pulling rickshas. Foreigners rarely if ever patronize the child rickshas pullers. But Chinese who do use them because they are cheaper generally appear to be the heartiest of their kind.

STARTING with cotton and stories many ago, in furniture as in everything else and kind of adjustable chairs, their varied—promises to produce a variety ever since the discovery of power machinery put it within the reach of everyone, first and last four of things and notions as to positions remarkable.

The demand for furniture covered with fabric needs from the fleece of the angora goat has increased steadily until now the United States leads the world in angora goat raising and consequently in the production of mohair materials.

Its great durability is unquestioned; the chief reason why mohair velvet is an upholstery perennial. Not even the beauty and luster of its soft texture would suffice to win the honor unless repeated exposure of mohair velvet, or velour as it is often called, did not surpass all other materials in wearing quality. This is partly because the mohair "nap" is the longest wearing cotton fiber known and partly because it is so tightly woven that the wear coming on the ends of the fiber instead of along the sides, as hair on the backs of these animals are found to be square inch of mohair velour. Some knowledge of the general structure and chemical composition of the mohair fiber is necessary to understand why it makes a superior upholstering fabric. Seen under a microscope, the mohair fiber is smooth and silky, while the fibers of wool are rations than on the wool fiber. This makes it difficult to interlace them so quickly, that dust tends to slide off the smooth hairs and that ordinary dirt is easily removed with a scrub brushing or with soap and water if necessary, without affecting the color.

Then, too, mohair takes a fast, solid color dye more readily than wool, so strong light need not be feared.

Like all natural fibers, mohair is normally attractive to moth pests, but this nuisance has been practically overcome by mohair manufacturers, who have perfected a means of permanently mothproofing mohair, even in raw state, before it is spun into yarn.

Mohair, the long, lustrous hair of the Angora goat, is produced in greatest quantity in Texas, which has more than 3,000,000 of these animals, or nearly one-half of the total number in the United States. The annual clip is about 17,000,000 pounds, or more than one-third of the total production of mohair in the world.

The Angora goat was introduced into Texas in 1849 by Capt. Richard Parker, who brought a few animals from Asia Minor. Their increase was slow for many years, but the industry has grown rapidly since 1880. Texas mohair is famous for its luster and fineness.

Mohair is used in the manufacture of men's clothing, ladies' dress goods, plushes, braids, and for many other purposes. Its use in upholstery is increasing rapidly.

"SUNNY" CAPTURES MARILYN MILLER'S WHOLE REPERTOIRE

All of Marilyn Miller's art as an actress, a dancer and a comedienne to the fore in "Sunny," the First National and Vitaphone version of her famous musical success, which ran for three years on Broadway.

Marilyn Miller is duly recognized as the outstanding star of musical comedy, and is one of the brightest lumin-aries of filmdom. Her picture "Sally," broke all box office records for the year, and "Sunny" is being hailed as an even greater success. It is at the Palace Theatre on Saturday and Sunday.

There are four songs and three dances in "Sunny", but there age no ensemble choruses. All the dances are by Miss Miller alone, or accompanied by the versatile Joe Donahue, of the Irish smile, who played with her on the stage.

The plot of "Sunny" "dabbles over with heroic drama, and tomfoolery, and gives complete play to all of Miss Miller's varied accomplishments as well as to her beauty and her vivid personality.

One of the strongest casts of the year has been assembled by Director William A. Seiter for "Sunny". It includes, in addition to Joe Donahue, Lawrence Gray, O. P. Heggie, Lew Cantor, Judith Vosselli, Barbara Bedford, Clyde Cook, Mackenzie Ward, and many others.

Down in Texas the farmers insure hogs. One farmer tried to realize his prize hog from being run over by a railroad train. He failed. Hog and farmer were both killed. Honoring Washington With Trees

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

One hundred and fifty years ago the Continental army, under the leadership of Gen. George Washington, was fighting the last battles which won the independence of the United States. Today a National Continental army is being mustered into service—not to fight any more battles but to aid in a great patriotic project. The project is to honor the memory of the commander of the first Continental army, the "peace-enlistment" of the Second Continental army is a civilian, Charles Lathrop Pack, president of the American Tree association, and his "position-book" calling for "recruits" for his "army" reads as follows:

"Ten million monuments to a great man? Ten million veterans, soldiers and civil-public-spirited, which will be as evergreen as is the memory of George Washington in the hearts of [illegible] people, reminding the first time he is ever the first in the hearts of his countrymen. Trees are said to be indestructible of marble, not statues of static stone. They are reborn every year in new form, a [illegible] written upon [illegible] phenomena—but growing things, since [illegible] life and beauty, and that living nature which the first [illegible] gifted into being. The more significant will they be because the hands of thousands of [illegible] will have put them in the native soil. They are to rise, deathless in the [illegible] of our country. Mountains stretching across the face of the continent.

"The whole population will have a part in the bicentennial celebration, of the birth of George Washington. We will become a [illegible] living army, an army of tree-planters, ready up of young and old enthusiasts in every state and hamlet, and actively engaged in setting up a living [illegible] to the one whom the country delights to honor.

"For the purpose of this remarkable celebration, Calvin Coolidge, when President, named the bicentennial commission. The American Tree association of Washington [illegible] co-operating with this commission is directing this gigantic task of planting 10,000,000 trees, each one [illegible] tive of a nation's honor to the national bereave participants filling way of commemorating the life and services of the master of Mount Vernon. What more significant and unique method could be chosen to honor the man who first led the United America from its [illegible]?

"Washington himself must have loved trees for his many extensive reminded references to their value and care, and he chose a spot for his home where there seemed to be an [illegible] shaded path that leads to his final resting place. Two colonies of elm, straight from the forests of Massachusetts, his constant companions along with those thousands of Americans who come in part his reverence during the daylight hours, the most have loved the regal beauty of the trees. In the symbolism of a tree was Washington be present, bereaved preeminently. Deep-rooted in the ground, a tree is like a man coming up out of the earth, but lifting its branches to heaven. And as it grows in usefulness, so it grows in beauty. It may sentient the eyes, it offers its shade to all who rest, and its characteristic [illegible] barrier a thirsty countryside and provide for its physical and esthetic necessities. So a tree bespeaks the spirit of Washington. He was generous in his service, regal in his leadership, commanding in his principles, while he exhibited a brotherly hand to a new and independent people struggling for fuller freedom.

"Not only will this tree planting involve an act of commemoration, but it will supremely carry out one of the guiding principles of George Washington, namely, that of self-sufficiency in national government. This means conservation. A nation to be strong and able to take care of itself in emergencies. Thus only can untarnished liberties become unnecessary. There is no greater need in the United States today, in the matter of self-strengthening, than that of trees. Washington would undoubtedly be the first to desire, as memorials to him, trees that will make the country a stronger and better one. There are 81,000,000 idle acres now existing in the United States which are available for forests only. The crop of timber steadily dwindles, while the rate of consumption is on the increase. There have been times when men and guns and bullets were the supreme necessity. This is not so now, for the national necessity is trees and more trees. It is one thing to subscribe to the principles of Washington; it is another thing to put them into everyday practice. Strength acquired from a constantly diminishing resource is one thing; strength from perpetuity, from ever-replenishing, is another. "Each city and town, each individual, each organization will leave its own problems in planting for George Washington.

"The town or state roadway engineer or shade tree commission should be called into consultation about roadside planting; the state forester willing to lend his talents and still ready, in case

1. The last living horse-chestnut tree planted in a row of thirteen by George Washington at Fredericksburg, Va., to symbolize the Thirteen colonies. This tree has been listed in the "Hall of Fame for Trees" by the American Tree association at Washington, D. C.

2. The certificate printed in buff and blue, the Continental army colors and also the Washington Bicentennial colors, which will be given for each tree planted in honor of George Washington that is registered with the American Tree association.

3. Presentation of a "grandchild" of the famous Washington elm at Cambridge, Mass., to the American Tree association by Mrs. James H. Dotsey of the Maryland Daughters of the American Revolution (on the right) and Mrs. John Dickinson Sherman, a member of the Washington Bicentennial commission (on the left). She and members of the National Press Club post of the American Legion helped plant the tree.

4. Gov. John Garland Pollard of Virginia making the dedication speech at the bicentennial tree planting for George Washington on the capitol grounds at Richmond. This is the first state-planted tree registered on the national honor roll of the American Tree association. Representatives from states which were the Thirteen colonies helped plant the tree.

Rivet is either the care of town or state forests.

"Then for George Washington! That is the cry that is going up in all parts of the country. Plant now, or at any suitable time before the advent of fall, so that strong headway may be made in firmly rooted in the native soil when they are subjected to the hazards of the Father of our Country on February 22, 1932.

"The first of the two million forty monuments will be the Washington Elm and George Washington town forests, memorials roadways, and memorial trees are in evidence. Every citizen in every city and hamlet—and more important, every future citizen—is invited to take part in the plans for paying the greatest honor ever paid to America's noblest born.

"The Second Continental Army of Tree Planters moves into action, while the inspiration, the love for, and the precepts of the first commander in chief nerve it on.

"The tree we plant a bicentennial tree in honor of Washington was, fittingly enough, the stately white pine tree to the nation—Virginia, in the state capital grounds in Richmond recently, John Garland Pollard, assisted by Gov. G. W. Tuck of the New Hampshire and representatives of the Thirteen colonies who are members of the National Washington Memorial association, planted such a tree and afterwards delivered the following address from a rostrum at the base of the great equestrian statue of Washington which stands near the Virginia capitol.

"The second tree was planted at Tallahassee, Fla., by Miss Pacie K. Carlton and he was assisted by Mrs. H. L. Bradford, president of the Tallahassee Woman's Club; Mrs. Barry Lee Baker, chairman of conservation; Harry Lee Baker, the state forester; Miss Katherine B. Hibbets, national chairman of conservation of the Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. William L. Wilson, president of the Florida Federation, and Mrs. Wilbur L. Wilde, state chairman of conservation of the Women's clubs.

Colorado was placed next in line, when the Women's clubs in Denver planted a tree in the capitol grounds on a spot selected by Governor Adams.

The state within hours Washington's name was the fourth in line when the D. A. R. chapter at Seattle fixed its plots for a tree-planting with the American Tree association.

Note that time the association reports that registrations of tree plantings have been coming in from individuals, civic, fraternal and patriotic organizations in virtually every state in the Union and with approach of the celebration of Arbor day in the different states it is believed that the movement will gain additional impetus.

Arbor day dates throughout the United States are as follows:

Arizona—In five northern counties April 3.
Arkansas—March 7.
California—March 7.
Colorado—April 17.
Connecticut—April or May by proclamation.
Delaware—April by proclamation.

Forest of [illegible]. Washington bicentennial trees have been divided into seven groups by the American Tree association. Individuals who desire to participate in the movement may select spots in a garden, in the street with proper permission from the municipal authorities, along a road or anywhere the individual has the right to plant a tree.

It is suggested that civic and other groups may in groups of trees on park lands owned by the community or state is more desirable.

Manufacturing plants are invited to plant forest trees upon lands owned by the banks and cities, such as park lands, watersheds of the city water supply or in town forests if such are owned by the municipality.

Colleges and schools are urged to further the American ideal by planting trees upon the grounds owned by the institution. Class plantings or institutional plantings have been suggested with appropriate exercises.

National organizations planting shall be of a memorial character, or a national organization can appropriate money for a large forest planting.

Many states have counties named for the great Washington. All this has been advised, that it will be appropriate for such counties to plant a county forest in memory of their namesake. Of course, all other counties can do like-time. It is pointed out that where forestry departments already be consulted when work on a state so large is undertaken, for in many cases the department not only will be able to furnish expert advice as to the planting but also may be able to provide the seedlings for planting.

Without exception every state owns land either in the form of state parks or general state estate holdings. Planting of trees on such land would properly be of the character of state functions conducted by the state forestry department with trees provided by state nurseries.

That all plantings especially by organizations or communities be ceremonial affairs with programs of patriotic character is urged by those who are fostering the movement.

In connection with this great Washington memorial, movement the association has issued a pamphlet, containing much valuable information as to selection of sites for planting, the kinds or kinds of trees to plant in the various localities, the care to be exercised before planting the trees in the ground and best planting times for these sections. A pertinent observation is contained in the very first paragraph. The first thing to do is to select your spare and double since the type of trees that will best fit in always keeping in mind the future."

For lack of the project in the idea of not only honoring Washington during the year which marks the two hundredth anniversary of his birth, but that these memorials shall result in boons to Americans directly all the years of the life of these trees.

The KITCHEN CABINET

Good housekeeping is not necessarily a burden—especially when you have many grand helps and a few basic principles to guide you. LYDIA, foundation and growth.

THIS AND THAT

Nowadays with the smallest of linens and lace for the table, so many up-to-date businesses save the wear and tear on these pieces for their whole use—endless, and for much [illegible] intends the delightful colors in crepe tissue are used for cloths and napkins. It is such a saving on both the linens and the purses, for if an accident occurs a fresh crepe cloth may be quickly placed with no damage to either the feelings of the hostess or guest.

This may help just the note of color in napkins and tablecloths that may be carried out in the refreshments, table decorations of flowers and glass or china.

The new china of note, unbreakable though quite expensive, may prove in the long run most economical. The intriguing colors on the pressed plates are most exquisite. Many luncheons use the large dinner plates for the crepe plates, matching with cup and saucer and reducing the service plate. Heat-glass is used for salad plates and other table accessories may be the same silver. In this way more table linen for luncheons without having a whole dinner set.

Variation should be followed as much as possible. Not only are they appealing to eye but their service as appetizers and in much more supply of the table with interest more greatly needed.

Ham Sandwich de Luxe—Chop cold, cooked lean ham, add preferred seasoning. Have eggs cold and cooked, add salt and mix well, add a bit of mustard the ham and bread, make sandwiches and cut into triangles. Try to put butter after dipping into the egg mixture. Serve this dish for luncheon with tea coffee.

The ordinary deviled ham when spread on buttered bread and covered with a thin slice of cheese and then browned in the oven, makes a most unusual combination.

To keep the family happy and well nourished one must be constantly alert to find new combinations.

South Dakota's "Last Lode"

Finding of the "last lode" in the Black Hills of South Dakota reveals the way in which price of this commodity rose. Placer of gold was first mine than 30 years ago. Frank Wendy, a cattleman, was hunting deer near where gold first was discovered in 1874. He sat down on a rock to rest, and idly began breaking a piece of white quartz. Suddenly the quartz split, revealing a nugget of coarse gold.

He hurried back to Custer and was prospected by Metz and Jack Imle to work the claim. Within hours nothing about mining, but he found the quartz vein, traced as a conjecture, and had washed out about $30 a day. But he cut across the vein instead of following it, so finally he had to quit. When he had been getting $40 or $50 it to find turned down $50,000 for the claim.

Safest Way

Remembering the "fire-proof" service of the boy scout days a man of Lima young man sang to sleep in a beautiful hope the Florence Herald to advise him. "Is it safe?" he asks. "It isn't safe," he replied, "it is the safest way possible." "Hy, all means, say," meditates the man of the moment. "You tell me to safe some one else done."

Wakeful restless CHILD needs Castoria

WE can never be sure just what makes an infant restless but the remedy can always be the same. Good old Castoria! There's evasion in every drop of this pure vegetable preparation, and not the slightest harm in its frequent use. As often as baby has a fretful spell, is feverish, or cries and can't sleep, let Castoria soothe and quiet him. Sometimes it's a touch of colic. Other times the constipation Or diarrhea—a condition that should always be checked promptly. Just keep Castoria handy, and give it promptly. Relief will follow very promptly, if it doesn't you should call a physician.

All through babyhood, Castoria should be a mother's standby, and a wise mother continues it in more liberal doses as a child grows up.

"Unreality" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Christian Science Churches on Sunday, April 5.

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made" (John 1:3).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Everything good or worthy, real, must image Whatever is valueless or baneful, the did not make, — hence its unreality. In the science of genesis we read that He saw everything which He had made, 'and behold, it was very good' " (p. 525).

C. M. T. C. QUOTAS HALF COMPLETED

All Records For Enrollments Are Broken

With 822 applications to attend the Citizens' Military Training Camps in Michigan this year already received, more than half the quota of 1,600 for the ninth has been completed, Phillip Newberry, Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War, announced today, giving figures for the first twenty days of enrollment, ended March 20th.

Thirteen with 2,75 applications is also said the half was made in filling its quota of ten." Mr. Newberry said in his statement.

Twenty counties in the state have already passed their quotas," the announcement continued, "and the remaining counties are rapidly filling. Cheboygan, Emmet, Kalkaska, Wexford, Missaukee, Genesee, St. Joseph, Berrien and Monroe. A dinner after examination appears to stimulate attendance in these counties.

"Never before have there been such a response to Citizens' Military Training Camps on the part of young men. The remarkable interest being shown in the appeal that these camps have to the young men who attend them. Every young man who has not already done so is now urged to make application at once. Counties are far behind their quotas and those which have exceeded their quotas can still send in applications until the latest quota is filled," he said. "Until July 1st, I shall remain with the Army in order that before its camps are held. However, with more than half the state quota completed before the season has begun, it is certain that the entire quota will be completed before the date of the camps and there seem odd applicants above the quota. Naturally we regret to have to refuse young men the opportunity of attending these camps because the quotas are already filled, and the government will not permit us to send more than the number prescribed by the War Department."

Five Telephone Employees Awarded 1930 Vail Medal

Four Michigan men honored for action in emergencies that resulted in saving lives. Operator receives medal for aiding in the capture of armed bandits. 1—Clarence J. Tietsma, cable splicer, Grand Rapids; 2—Wilbur Hass, operator at Romeo; 3—Glenn Bottens, lineman, Holland; 4—Lawrence Earl Harvey, splicer's helper, Flint; 5—William L. Gale, road man.

THEODORE N. VAIL MEDAL IN BRONZE AWARDED TO FIVE

FOUR MEN AND ONE WOMAN EMPLOYED BY MICHIGAN BELL CITED FOR UNUSUAL SERVICE

'INITIATIVE AND PROMPT ACTION OF TELEPHONE WORKERS SAVE LIVES,' OPERATOR AIDS IN CAPTURE OF BANDITS

Bursch Forsher, president of the Michigan Bell Telephone Company, announced the award of the Theodore N. Vail medal in bronze for 1930, to five employees of the company—four men and one woman—for outstanding acts of service in moments of extreme emergency. They are Clarence J. Tietsma, transit repair cable splicer, Grand Rapids; cable splicer, Glenn Bottens, Hampton Beaman, Lawrence Earl Harvey, flint cable's helper, William L. Gale, laborer, patrolman, and Mrs. Minnie Hass, operator, Romeo.

The four men will receive the Vail Medal for the exercise of unusual initiative, quick action, and the application of technical knowledge in telephone company First Aid classes, which resulted in the saving of human life, three from drowning and one from asphyxiation. Mrs Hass is cited for rendering material aid in the capture of armed bandits.

Details of the medals in bronze, silver and gold are being drawn up. Chester T. Vail Memorial Fund, established seven years ago in memory of a man whose life work was devoted to the development of universal telephone service and who inculcated into the Bell System many of its high traits of initiative, The silver and gold medals are national awards. Since the establishment of the fund, 49 bronze medals have been awarded to Michigan people, 44 of them employees of the Michigan Bell company and four employed by connecting telephone companies. Two silver medals have been awarded Michigan people.

Clarence J. Tietsma, Grand Rapids, is cited for prompt action and courage, and the application of first aid, in saving the life of a young woman who was in a raft in Big White Fish lake, near Pierson, Michigan, last August 8, he heard the girl call for help and saw her sink, approximately 100 feet distant. Mr. Tietsma swam to the spot, dived and brought her to the surface, and started with her toward the shore. He was met by a row boat, into which the girl was placed. He applied artificial respiration and, assisted, rentered breathing. Prompt action, skillful application of first aid by Glenn Bottens, of Hamilton saved the life of a boy four and two August 8. While fishing in Pottage lake, near Kalamazoo, with companions, who gathered hazard dangerously close to the edge of a steep embankment, overlooking the lake, where he saw the head of a little daughter, attempting to the spot he recovered the boy at a depth of 12 feet. Recently, he rescued an armed robber during an attempted escape from custody. Lawrence Earl Harvey, splicer's helper, Flint, was cited for the fast time since his action. Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Sebourn, visitors in Florida for several months, returned home Thursday and report having a very trip and vacation in the southland.

A similar citation was made to the wife of Lawrence Earl Harvey, Flint lineman, when the bridge between Grand Lake, near Holly, Augusta, to which point he was driven with several young women, swamped and pushed others, fell into the water. He held up the motor, applied artificial respiration, and directed others in helping the unconscious women ashore. This accomplished after more than an hour of continued effort. Letter is learned that the young woman was a telephone employee.

William L. Hale district repairman saved a woman from death by applying artificial respiration after a telephone in a sunshine station on Main St. he overheard a girl appeal to the attendant for help in gaining entrance to the home of her grandmother beneath the floor boards unable to arouse the elderly woman and feared for her safety. The attendant and Mr. Hale forced entrance through a window and found the house filled with gas and the woman unconscious. Mr. Hale applied artificial respiration and restored consciousness.

Mrs. Minnie Hass, sheet operator at Romeo, is cited for initiative, prompt action and the exercise of good judgment in emergency. While duty at 2:20 a. m. recently, Mrs. Hass received a call from a gasoline station owner, asking that the village marshall be summoned. She was unable on the police call light and, after repeated effort, found the office by telephone. As a result, the marshall and members of the State police force surprised four men in an attempt to gain entrance to the gas station safe. Three escaped, one man was wounded, two were captured and two escaped. Mrs. Hass called several line subscribers and a small connecting telephone company in the direction she believed the escaped bandits likely had taken, and soon men were captured because of the alarm she spread.

The four telephone men are holders of certificates awarded jointly to the American Red Cross and the Michigan Bell Telephone company upon completion of first aid training conducted by the company. Letters of commendation for noteworthy acts also were recommended by the Michigan committee of award for Wilbur C. Marsh, cable splicer, and Oscar H. Holcomb, his helper, Carroll L. Bills, lineman; and Foster I. Huber, sealer, Jackson division Traffic engineer, all of Grand Rapids.

AMATEUR GOLF TOURNAMENT

RETURNS TO CHARLEVOIX FOR 1931 GAMES

By a recent decision the State Amateur Golf Tournament again comes to Charlevoix where the championship games were scheduled for July 15 to 18. This decision in planning a amateur players who are conversant with the Belvedere course, who state that there is no better course in the state upon which a contest could be staged.

Lansing was considered as a second choice as the place for holding the 1931 meet and no doubt would have been selected had not the Belvedere been in favor with the committee. In this decision the Belvedere location, its splendid grounds, fine fairways and greens were taken with its entire surroundings, gave to Charlevoix the 1931 event event.

The games in the 1931 tournament draw a large number of outstanding players as contenders from the entire state. A condition that will be repeated this year on a far larger scale, therefore the 1931 games are already attracting attention of golf amateur and fans with everything pointing to a record breaking attendance this year.

LOCAL K. OF P. ENTERTAINS

VISITORS FROM EAST JORDAN AND CENTRAL LAKE

Members of Charlevoix Lodge Knights of Pythias acted as hosts to twenty-five members of East Jordan and a like number from Central Lake Tuesday night of last week, at the K. of P. Hall.

Following a splendid dinner, served early in the evening, the visitors and locals engaged in a cribbage contest in which, through courtesy or some other sufficient reason, Charlevoix members emerged in third place, while East Jordan won first with Central Lake players a close second.

All in all the contestants enjoyed a most pleasant evening of entertainment.

An invitation was extended to both Charlevoix and Central Lake Lodges to become guests of East Jordan Lodge-date not set—next week.

SHAKESPEARE STUDY CLUB VISITS E. JORDAN MEMBERS

For some considerable time past members of Charlevoix Shakespeare Study Club had had under consideration a meeting to be held at the home of Mrs. H. W. PLANTING ADVANCED TROUT FRY IN LAKES

Captain C. J. Allers with State Patrol No. 1 and crew are engaged this week planting advanced trout fry produced at the local government hatchery, in local and nearby waters. Before they have the job completed they will have planted 8,000,000 of the little "bugs". Some of these will be placed in Lake Charlevoix, some on fishing grounds near Beaver Island, some near Leland and others at various places in Lake Michigan. Recently Captain Allers was engaged in like work on Lake Huron for several days during which the planting numbered 66,000,000.

GANGSTERS HUMAN, NOT MERELY KILLERS

"Potentially, we are all every kind of character," says Edward G. Robinson, who plays the title role in "Little Caesar", which comes to the Palace Theatre on Saturday and Sunday.

"Little Caesar" is First National's Vitaphone version of W. R. Burnett's famous bootlegger. The novel was selected as the book of the month by the Literary Guild recently. It vividly portrays the rise—and fall—of an American gang leader, especially dwelling on the psychology and traits and social environment which give rise to his type.

"I always look for the human side of every character I play, whether he be good, bad, or just indifferent. A character in a picture should never be regarded as a mere type. For instance it is wrong to look on the gangster as a mere killer. As a matter of fact the biggest gangsters never do any killing. That is left to hired gunmen. The gangsters of today are a direct misdirected outgrowth of big business methods. They operate on the lines of trusts continuing everything. They are not content until they have wiped out rival gangs and control the whole business—because it is more economical to operate that way. The business king sometimes crushes his rival in an economic coup. The gangster, living outside the law uses violent methods—the machine gun is his answer to competition. Efficiency, organization, business psychology, knowledge of human nature, and power in leadership of men—these are the things which go to make a head gangster, such as 'Little Caesar,' the position which he holds. And of course it is all twisted and warped —just human ability gone wrong."

In addition to Robinson, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Glenda Farrell, William Collier, Jr., Sidney Blackmer, Ralph Ince, George E. Stone, are among those in the cast. Mervyn LeRoy directed from the scenario by Francis Faragoh.

Rev. G. E. Parker was called to St. Joseph, Michigan, Sunday, to officiate at the funeral of Mrs. Simons, wife of Capt. A. J. Simons of the Goodrich Transit Co.

SCHOOL NOTES
The High School Operetta
"The China Show" an original operetta in two acts, will be presented the first week in May under the direction of Mrs. McKee.

The author, Arthur A. Penn, is a writer of long experience in professional stage productions. The Penn plays have become the most successful and most performed pieces ever staged and sung by amateurs. They come nearer the standard of such favorites as "The Mikado" and "Pinafore" than anything we know. Witty dialogue sprightly with melody, whimsical characterizations, and musically scores replete with melody and entrancing rhythms, distinguish these works.

The operetta is a fantastic romance of "Old China" and with beautiful scenery and gorgeous costumes it bids fair to surpass "The Belle of Barcelona," which was presented last year with such success. The costumes will be rented from Brenners Company in Detroit and no efforts will be spared to have the setting as realistic and attractive as possible.

The cast has been practicing diligently since the beginning of the second semester and are now ready to begin staging the operetta with the chorus.

Senior Class Honors
Senior Class honors for 1931 were given to Elaine Tillotson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Tillotson, who received the valedictory by having a percentage of 97 with a record of all A's and to Gwendolen Miller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Miller, the Salutatory, who had a percentage of 96.1, which consisted of 24 A's and 2 B's.

Both girls are well known in Charlevoix. The two are skilled in music; Miss Tillotson took a lead in the operetta her Sophomore Year while Miss Miller is taking a lead in the operetta this year. They have both done exceptional work in declama-

Old Ottoman Code Being Displaced in Palestine

Jerusalem.—Ottoman law, which has been in force in Palestine since the days of the Turkish conquest, is gradually being replaced by modern laws.

The first code instituted was commercial, and others followed, dealing with the organization of the courts, land registration, and criminal procedure. The Ottoman penal code, which dates from 1858, is now undergoing complete revision by a Turkish committee in operation in Angora, and will shortly be applied to the whole country. The previous system of penal law is based on the principle that a crime is punished by a payment of money to the injured party, and the amount of compensation is fixed by the Koran. Under the new code, which is largely based on the French penal code, the punishment for crime is imprisonment, and the amount of compensation is left entirely to the discretion of the judge. Another important change is the abolition of the system of "collective responsibility," under which a village was held responsible for crimes committed within its boundaries, unless the criminal could be discovered. Under the new code only the actual criminal is punished.

Cotton was brought to England from the East Indies and Levant by the merchants of the Levant Company, and was used for the manufacture of fustian, a mixed cotton and linen cloth. Cotton was also grown in the West Indies and Brazil, and was imported into England in considerable quantities. Its use was forbidden by law in order to encourage the woolen industry, which was then the principal industry of England. Many people were punished for wearing cotton clothes. In spite of these laws, however, the use of cotton increased, and in the reign of George III. the prohibitory laws were repealed.

Hint From Prosecutor Causes Arrest of Man

Newark, N. J.—Hearing the prosecutor in the case say that the only possession of the defendant was a pocketbook, a man arrested in connection with the robbery of a bank here asked to have the pocketbook returned to him.

The request was made by Angelo Cappelli, who was charged with participating in the robbery of the bank of $30,000. Cappelli was arrested on information supplied by Joseph Cappelli, who was also charged with participating in the robbery. Joseph Cappelli, who was arrested in Chicago, was brought to Newark by detectives.

When Angelo Cappelli asked for the return of the pocketbook, Prosecutor Joseph Smith told him he would be glad to do so, but that he feared the defendant would not be permitted to have it in his cell.

"Then I'll be in fine shape," Angelo Cappelli replied. "I have only $1,000 in it."

SOME THINGS CAN'T BE CHANGED

Since the undocumented of Congress, members of the Senate and House have received the benefit of The World Calendar Association, an American organization which has undertaken an intensive study of all the factors involved in the proposed international simplification of the calendar.

For the past five years Congress has been urged, by spokesmen for schools, business and economists of practically every persuasion or zone of calendar reform. The present irregularities of the calendar have been discussed by the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, &c. a general consensus of opinion having resulted that changes are desirable. The only stumbling block has been an apparently insoluble one, for the United States alone could support none of the proposed changes. A 15-month calendar, for example, would be much too radical a departure to meet people.

The World Calendar Association's report will prove to satisfy the situation. It puts calendar reform on a sound basis by taking care of all that there are some things which cannot be changed. The Gregorian number the length of the year and that of the day and so should not be changed. Any proposal must be universal in character. The fourth Wednesday in March, for instance, is neither the length of the year nor

A DOCTOR'S ADVICE for Stubborn Bowels

"Drink at least six glasses of water daily—preferably before meals. Eat bulkier foods, such as vegetables, fruits and coarse breads. Use a mild laxative as needed."

That is Dr. Caldwell's advice to people with stubborn bowels. He specialized on the bowels; treated thousands for constipation and its ills. The prescription he used over and over in his practice has become the world's most popular laxative: "Syrup Pepsin." So it became called, was tested by more than 47 years of practice.

Today you can get Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin at any druggists in America. It is always the same, quite closely resembling in the original prescription from leading herbs, pure pepsin and other valuable ingredients. Nothing in it to harm even a baby. It does not gripe, sicken or cause any discomfort. But it moves the bowels; it gets rid of all the morning mouth which clogs the system, makes you miserable, causes headache, biliousness, sour, bloated, weak, nervous. A doctor should not need to wait for the bowels. Syrup Pepsin is a famous doctor's advice of a safe, pleasant, effective laxative for men, women, older folks, babies and children.

REGULAR PAINS

The modern Miss needs no "time out" for the time of month.

If you've ever taken Bayer-Aspirin for a headache, you know how soon the pain subsides. It is just as effective in the relief of those pains peculiar to women!

Don't celebrate certain days of every month by suffering. It's old-fashioned. It's unnecessary. Aspirin will always enable you to carry on as normal. Take enough to assure you complete comfort. If it proves genuine Aspirin it cannot possibly hurt you. Bayer Aspirin does not depress the heart. It does nothing but stop the pain, as use it freely.

Headaches come at inconvenient times. So do pains. Get a little Bayer Aspirin and always have the day. Neuralgia. Neuritis. Rheumatism. Pains that once kept people home are forgotten half an hour after taking a few of these remarkable tablets. No use the drug nagging aches that long periods and "nerves" by day a sleepless night.

Genuine Bayer Aspirin tablets cost so very little after all, that it doesn't pay to experiment with imitations!

Memorials to Monroe

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

A PHIL 28 is the anniversary of the birth of James Monroe, fifth President of the United States and first man to occupy the presidential house and the White House. Monroe was born in Virginia, a descendant of the Virginia Monroes and first saw the light of day in the county of Westmoreland. He attended the College of William and Mary, but left before graduation to enter the army. He served in the Revolutionary war, was wounded at the battle of Trenton and was promoted to the rank of major. Later he was made aide-de-camp to General Lord Stirling and served in that capacity for two years.

At the close of the war Monroe returned to Virginia and began the study of law under the supervision of Thomas Jefferson, who was governor of the state. He was admitted to the bar in 1786 and began the practice of his profession in Fredericksburg, Va., where the principal clientele will be itself. Thereupon Monroe and Mrs. Monroe moved to Richmond, Va., where the former opened a law office and began the practice of his profession. He was elected to the Virginia assembly in 1782 and served in that body for three years. In 1783 he was elected to the executive council and in 1786 was chosen by the assembly as one of the delegates to the national congress under the Articles of Confederation. He was a member of that congress for three years and at the termination of his service in that body he resumed the practice of law in Fredericksburg.

At that time the home of Thomas Jefferson, near Charlottesville, Va., was the center of a brilliant social life. Jefferson was a widower and his daughter, Martha, was married to Thomas Mann Randolph, a member of one of the most prominent families of Virginia. Monroe was a frequent visitor at the Jefferson home and soon fell in love with Elizabeth Kortright, daughter of Lawrence Kortright, a wealthy New York merchant. They were married in New York city February 16, 1786, and went to live in Fredericksburg, where their first child was born. Later they moved to Charlottesville, where Monroe began the practice of law. Their second daughter was born there. Monroe was elected to the continental congress in 1783 and served in that body for three years. He was then appointed minister to France by President Washington and served in that capacity from 1794 to 1796. He was recalled by President Washington, but was reappointed minister to France by President Jefferson in 1803 and was sent to England on a special mission to negotiate a treaty for the purchase of New Orleans and Florida. He was appointed governor of Virginia in 1799 and served for three years. He was elected to the United States senate in 1790 and served for four years. He was appointed secretary of state by President Madison in 1811 and served in that capacity during the last two years of the war of 1812. He was also secretary of war for a short time during the administration of Madison.

Monroe was elected president in 1816 and was reelected in 1820. His administration was marked by the settlement of the Florida question, the Missouri compromise and the promulgation of the Monroe doctrine. He died in New York city July 4, 1831, and was buried in Richmond, Va., on the anniversary of his birth.

2. Attilio Piccirilli, New York sculptor, with his statue of President Monroe which is to be given a permanent location at Ash Lawn, near Charlottesville, Va., Monroe's home for 25 years, after being in the sculptor's studio for many years. It is 11 feet high; double the life size of its subject, made from a solid block of Carrara marble and weighs three tons. It was made after the Vanderlyn portrait of Monroe and represents him at the age of fifty.

3. The dilapidated mansion at 95 Cooper street, New York city, in which President Monroe died on July 4, 1831, was sold at public auction a few years ago when the Amenia Seton and Historic Preservation society, which had bought it, was unable to get enough to operate.

4. Laurence Gouverneur Hoes and his mother, Mrs. Rose Gouverneur Hoes, of Washington, D. C., at the entrance of the tomb of President Monroe in Fredericksburg, Va. Mr. Hoes, a great-grandnephew of Monroe, purchased the building and on April 26, 1923, the one hundred seventieth anniversary of Monroe's birth, it was dedicated as a Masonic shrine.

5. Mrs. Rose Gouverneur Hoes of Washington, D. C., great-granddaughter of President Monroe, placing a wreath on the grave of Monroe in Richmond, Va., on the anniversary of his birth.

Monroe was a member of the convention called to ratify the federal constitution and was a warm friend of Patrick Henry in opposition to the ratification. It gave the convention large power. Later, however, he assented to the ratification by Virginia with the understanding that the proposed amendments would be made.

He was one of the first Virginians to take office under the constitution. Two men whose wives married Richard Henry Lee and William Grayson. Lee's best commands Virginia and said Monroe was selected to succeed him. Finding himself with the anti-Federalists, he resigned in May, 1790, and was appointed representative of the United States at Paris.

The position was a difficult one, for both England and France were resorting our seas on with outrages, although at now with much violence and the former was not openly at warfare with the latter. Monroe was divided into the factions and succeed in getting with sympathy to their people and the other favorable disposed toward England. Although the succeeding Period of Citizen Monroe did what he could for time to avoid war, although his efforts were unsuccessful, he helped strengthen the country.

Returning to America he was made governor of Virginia and served for three years. At about this time Pichu Genet, minister to France, was sent back to France and as the head of the house of the house Montmorel there was a fuss. The question was governor's duties as city to purchase the ground of the river from France. Here was a chance for Monroe to give Monroe a chance to go back to France and relieve the situation.

He was selected as a special envoy to start Paris and help Robert Livingston, the resident minister, treat for the Louisiana purchase. Napoleon, it, knew of the supposed reversion of territory to France. Spain, however, had previously sold this territory to England but was ready to sell it to France. Livingston, at times on the sale of the mouth of the river and said he had signed with. "Sire the whole or none." He asked one hundred million francs.

Following it's successful deal in Paris Monroe went to London to assist in securing a treaty settling our maritime controversy with Great Britain. This treaty failed on the provision against the future improvement of our system of Freedom. Monroe proceeded to Madrid sending it to the senate. Monroe resigned to Irony in Story of the Famous "Fireside Song"

The sentiment of a famous song, Home, Sweet Home, was written by John Howard Payne, who was a well-known actor, author and playwright. He was born in New York city in 1791 and died in Tunis, Africa, in 1852. He was the author of a number of plays, but his fame rests on the song which he wrote in 1823 while in London. The song was first sung in the opera Clari, the Maid of Milan, which was produced at Covent Garden theater, London, May 8, 1823. The song was sung by Miss Maria Tree, who was the wife of William Tree, a well-known actor. The song was first published in the United States in 1824 in a collection of songs entitled The Opera Singer. Substitute for Stable Manure Specialist Is Developing Synthetic Compost for Mushrooms.

Prepared by the Home Service Department of the United States Department of Agriculture.

With the horse population steadily decreasing, southern growers of the mushroom crop have been looking to the United States Department of Agriculture for a commercially satisfactory substitute for stable manure, the compound usually employed in growing this crop. Its inventor is Dr. Isaac Bayley Sinden, specialist in mushroom investigations of the department, in cooperation with the Pennsylvania State College. Dr. Sinden says that the new substitute is not an exact duplicate of stable manure, but that it is entirely satisfactory.

Synthetic Compost Tested.

The artificial compost was first tested out in 1926, and three years of experimental work have followed. Some difficulty was encountered in getting the right kind of bacteria to work in the synthetic mixture, but this has been overcome. Mushroom growers have shown much interest in the new compost, and their reports, received from time to time, indicate that it is entirely satisfactory for commercial purposes. The experiments are far enough advanced, however, that the producers of fertilizers are now manufacturing the chemicals used in the synthetic mixture.

Industry is Growing.

The mushroom industry in this country has made rapid commercial progress during the past 20 years, according to Dr. Hunter Lindsay. "This has resulted, in some instances, in considerable overproduction, and the use of special formulas instead of horse manure for growing the crop. The use of such formulas shows to a big extent the control of insect pests and diseases and the proper sanitation in the growing rooms. The material is inserted in the soil in the form of a compost, and no change is made in the usual cultural practices.

Favor Natural Methods to Raise Young Calves

Dairy authority has much to say about the care of the calf. Some of it is new, some of it is old, but all of it is worth while reading. Following are a few of the suggestions:

Keep the calf growing from the start. Don't stunt it. Don't let it get chilled. Don't let it get wet. Don't let it get hungry. Don't let it get thirsty. Don't let it get dirty. Don't let it get lousy. Don't let it get constipated. Don't let it get scours. Don't let it get indigestion. Don't let it get impatient. Don't let it get lonesome. Don't let it get disappointed. Don't let it get discouraged. Don't let it get disgusted. Don't let it get disinterested. Don't let it get disorganized. Don't let it get disillusioned. Don't let it get disappointed. Don't let it get disgusted. Don't let it get disinterested. Don't let it get disorganized. Don't let it get disillusioned.

Acid-Forming Foods

The foods which contain a large amount of sulphur, chlorine, phosphorus and nitrogen are those which produce an acid reaction in the body. Acid foods include meat, fish, eggs, cheese, oysters, cereals, dried beans and peas, and all nuts except chestnuts. Foods which contain a large amount of potassium, sodium, calcium, magnesium and iron are those which produce an alkaline reaction in the body. Alkaline foods include fruits, vegetables, potatoes, sweet potatoes, milk and cream.

About Sweatbands

The first sweatbands for hats are said to have been the patent of a Parisian named Grosset, who, in 1810, invented a kind of cap with a sweatband of leather, which was to be worn under the hat and so protect the lining from perspiration. The sweatband was to be made of the same material as the lining of the hat, and its edges were to be sewed to the lining of the hat.

Plan Fight to Finish on Gypsy Moth

Albany, N. Y.—Within a few days little caterpillars emerged from a million cocoons at Medford, Mass., 25 years ago. They started on a march of devastation that has cost New England states $10,000,000.

A relentless war is now being waged in the Hudson and Champlain valleys to prevent the ravagers from invading the rest of the country.

The New York conservation department, in charge of the campaign, has already spent $1,000,000 in the Hudson valley.

This year New York's legislature will recommended that the annual appropriation for the insect war be doubled, so as to serve the dual purpose of strengthening the state's forces against the ever-prospering horde and to provide extra jobs for unemployed, said it is being done.

Conservation Commissioner Henry Morgenthau, Jr., the model federal administration for increased assistance in cleaning up the heavily infested area in New England. So it looks as though the campaign will be on for some years.

The invasion began in 1869, when a few of the insects which Leopold Trouvelot was experimenting with silkworms in an effort to produce a silkworm fortune in certain climates, specimens escaped. He notified the proper authorities but no attention was paid. For another child 20 years later, when ravages of the pests, which Trouvelot had imported from Europe began to cause general alarm.

The Massachusetts legislature took effective cognizance of the menace and spent $2,000,000 during the following ten years in a futile effort to halt the advance. Since then the moth's area has enlarged 100 times, according to the New York department.

Growers of Fruit Hail Court Victory

Washington—In an opinion handed down by Justice McReynolds, the Supreme court reversed the conclusions of two lower courts in a unanimous decision that the Dingley paving for tunning fruits, grains and vegetables for market by sending them in a box car of boats or motor-sent, is illegal.

The petition of the American Fruit Growers, Inc., for a review of the case by the United States Supreme court was supported by a strong memorandum from the United States Department of Agriculture and a motion request from the state of Florida. Before the case was argued the states of California, Arizona, Georgia, Louisiana and Texas joined their appeal.

Threatened Calamity.

The American Fruit Growers contended that it would be to the detriment of a calamity, affecting every fruit and vegetable grower and shipper in the United States if a motion stopping could be maintained by the Dingley paving on a minimum to such economy use as an agricultural and distributor as he has for forth, said stated, however, that the Supreme court decision leaves no ground for continuance of this proceeding, as it not only sets aside the period on the use of horse, but also is to the effect that no one may be held liable under any circumstances for dusting to fresh fruits and vegetables containing lead.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

GRATITUDE

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK, Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

I have no doubt that every normal feel a greater sense of appreciation or gratitude or affection for his parents than he is pleased to call it by the name. There are no memories so rich and satisfying as those which are associated with the home. Nothing else can take the place of a father's love for his family, or a mother's devotion to her children. Nothing else can compare with the joy that comes to a family in the home. Nothing else can take the place of a mother's love for her children. Nothing else can compare with the joy that comes to a family in the home.

Insects Prove Useful in Controlling Weeds

The discovery that insects will insects are helpful in the control of weeds or another is striking wrong, according to the specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture, in many parts of the world insects have been imported for the sole purpose of controlling weeds which have threatened to ruin the agriculture.

Entomologists of the Hawaiian Sugar Planters' association have introduced from Mexico a number of insects which feed on the lantana plant, a pest, tenacious weed.

Some insect, plant lice, caterpillars, and beetles are now being introduced into Australia to feed on the prickly pear cactus, a plant which has spread over the country at an alarming rate. A few years ago it was said that 60,000,000 acres of land in Australia were overgrown by this cactus, and the rate of increase was about 1,000,000 acres a year. After other methods of control had failed the plan of importing insect enemies was adopted, and it is possibly successful, according to recent reports.

HISTORY CAN REPEAT ITSELF

Last December the Treasury estimated a deficit of $180,000,000 at the end of this fiscal year, June 30. The estimate has been raised to $500,000,000 or more.

There seems to be three ways to meet this deficit: First, increase in Federal income tax; second, suspension of sinking fund payments for reduction of the national war debt; third, a slashing of public expenditures.

The seventy-first Congress appropriated $10,200,000,000 of public money during the greatest depression in 40 years. Many states have followed the lead of Congress in appropriation expense records.

Minority blocs of voters and public officials have for the past decade sought to put the government into business at the expense of the taxpayer and private enterprise who must furnish the taxes to carry on government. Only in degree is the policy different from the Russian system which confiscates wealth and then finds itself without capital to carry on its activities.

In an editorial entitled "Enemies of the People," the Saturday Evening Post of March 28 says:

"In our opinion, the real enemies of the people are those who try to foist upon them added burdens of debt and inflation. We do not believe there is any opposition between sound finance and humanity. This does not mean that every banker or captain of industry who opposes extravagant legislation looking to an enormous increase in debt and taxation, is necessarily a wise man in all respects. There are shortsighted bankers and financiers . . . But the banker or prominent business man who has the courage to say 'No' when irresponsible headline seekers demand that the government appropriate large sums of money for whatever form of relief or job promotion happens to be on the front page at the moment, is performing a real public service which should be recognized and commended."

Our public men and public servants should be racking their brains to find ways and means to bring taxation, legislation and regulation back to normal along with commodity prices, production and employment.

Extravagance, resulting from the craze for political privilege and power, has wrecked many industries and many nations, as history will prove.

U. S. TERRITORIES VISIT PARIS

Work on the exhibits at the International Colonial Exposition in Paris has virtually been completed, and the Exposition will be opened on May 1, according to schedule. People who travel to France to view this vast project, will "take a trip around the world in a day," according to those who have had the privilege of seeing the exhibits in advance.

Although the part which the United States is taking in this vast exhibition is fairly well known, it is not generally realized that many colorful possessions will also be featured. In one building will be housed exhibits from Samoa, Porto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Hawaii. In another, Alaska's display will be viewed, while exhibits from Guam and the Philippines are placed in a separate building.

The exhibits from Guam consist of maps, photographs, sepia prints, and articles of native life, all of which convey impressions of the region's activities and development. The Philippine display is said to be the costliest of the entire United States group. It includes a display of natural, fishery, forestry and mineral products, manufactured goods, mural paintings, wax statues, relief maps and government publications.

Samoa in advertising the bread-fruit trees, its dwellings, ceremonial costumes, canoes, and its governmental activities in the way of education, law observance, health, and transportation. From Porto Rico comes a display of native products, a reproduction of San Juan Gate and its key, a model of the harbor, historic photographs, maps, and booklets in various languages.

A complete sugar exhibit will feature Hawaii's contribution which will also include a portrayal of the fishing industry as well as numerous articles of native handiwork and industry. Alaska will display totem poles, dog sleds and harness, fishing implements, native craftsmanship, explorers' outfits, seal fur, reindeer hides, and demonstrations of mining methods.

WHAT IS WRONG WITH THE OIL INDUSTRY

Production of oil in the United States doubled between the years 1914 and 1922, and again doubled between 1922 and 1929. There are some 325,000 producing oil wells.

This indicates what is wrong with the oil industry. The evolution of the "gasoline age"—an evolution which restricted itself to a comparatively few years—called for unprecedented progress and activity on the industry's part. Wells were drilled on a wholesale scale, refining processes were improved, a gigantic marketing system was developed. And the industry managed, on short notice, to keep the public supplied with high-quality oil products at a reasonable price.

Then demand ceased increasing, and during 1930 it was less than in 1929. Great surplus stocks of oil were built up, and they had to either be disposed of, stored or wasted. Production could not be curtailed as rapidly as consumption fell off.

Now it is hoped that proration and unitization of oil fields may save the industry from disruption, and prevent waste of our oil resources. Excessive production does no one good, and the public eventually pays. The oil industry's efforts to adjust supply and demand are in the interest of sound industrial conditions.

ECONOMICAL HAPPINESS AFLOAT

One person in every eighteen in the United States today is interested in motor boating. This is a bigger percentage than the best record compiled by the bicycle when it was at the height of its popularity in the gay nineties.

The small cruiser and the popularity of the outboard motor and fast inexpensive runabouts have been the two outstanding contributions to the astonishing current growth in popularity of this form of recreation. It is bound to grow rapidly now that "motor boating" no longer means "yachting" from the financial standpoint. The small cruiser is economical to operate and add nobility to all of the delights of a summer cottage on the water.

Even with the rapid growth of good roads the motor boat is a boghser of every town and village in the thickly populated areas of the United States. Automatically this increases the attractiveness of bays spent on the water.

Families and friendly groups who cruise the shores and inland waters of this country are assured of easy relaxation which spells health and mental as well as physical rest. It is a sport that actually contributes to the health of the nation and, with the wide price range of reliable motor boats now making this pleasure available to practically everybody, will have world-wide vogue in the near future.

Sports such as this which promote health and happiness and which at the same time do not impair the public wealth should be encouraged. Too many men who are valuable to their communities, not to mention their families, shorten their lives by participating in sports for which they are physically unsuited or unprepared.

This does not mean that motor boating is an old man's game. While the head of the family might enjoy the prospect of gathering his little flock together for a congenial adventure on pleasant nearby waters there is nothing more dashing, and again inexpensive, than a zipping dash through the dancing waters in a snappy outboard racer or small comfortable runabout. Motor boating is an ideal sport for the entire family.

REGULATING BUSINESS TO DEATH

Commenting on a proposed bill to make it unlawful for utilities to sell electrical appliances in Indiana, the Indianapolis Commercial recently said: "This is only one example to show to what lengths some legislators will go in their endeavors to regulate business. If they had their way, business generally would almost be regulated to death."

The attack on the electric utilities, it should be understood, will not long be confined to that industry if it is measurably successful. The attackers have as their objective the eventual socialization, at the public expense, of all basic businesses. They are motivated by a social philosophy directly opposed to the democratic principle of individual initiative.

In the United States public utility is one of our greatest taxpayers and employers, both in good and bad times. In giving employment, in contributing to the cost of government, it is an unexcelled influence for stability. Unfriendly utility legislation will, in the long run, be damaging to every citizen and every business.

CHECKING SUN AND RAIN

In Washington one may see records of many patents born to blush unseen. Uniburn children of inventive minds, they spell in many cases tales of real tragedy—inventions which have missed production and riches for their owners by perhaps only a hair's breadth. But there are other dormant patents which contain an element of humor.

Take for example umbrellas. Parasols and umbrellas apparently need stylists rather than inventors. For instance, a new way to "check the sun" has just appeared in smart shops. It follows fairly conventional lines, but is novel—and successful—because made of several layers of fine, soft net, the outer layer a small smart check. This parasol is charming. But it was "styled;" not "invented."

The patent office can show you umbrellas with "wristshields" umbrellas with "shoulder side drops," square and moon-shaped umbrellas whose commercial success has gone no further than the inventors' minds.

Senator Norris of Nebraska let it be known through friends that he had sent word to the President that in case the Muscle Shoals ownership bill was signed, he would be willing to resign from the Senate and accept a job on the commission the bill provided to run the power and fertilizer business. Even to so strong a temptation President Hoover did not yield.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By Frank P. Litchert

Although 1931, politically speaking, is one of the periods generally characterized as an "off year," already the national politicians, quiescent for several months, now are beginning to bestir themselves. There are no elections of national importance this year, but we must keep in mind the fact that only a few short months must pass until the beginnings of another national campaign will be upon us. In just about eight months the Republican National committee can be expected to meet in Washington and name the time and the place for the holding of the Republican national convention in 1932. Then the political pot will begin to boil. The Democratic National Committee can be expected to follow shortly after by naming the location and date for the holding of the Democratic national convention. In a few weeks from that date, if indeed not sooner, the preliminary work for selection of national delegates for the two national conventions will be in order. In much less than a year from now it will be deep in the preliminaries of the national campaign.

During the past few months, due to the efforts of the depression, the Democratic party is about to get out of the congressional campaign of 1930 the newspapers have devoted most of their space to criticism of the inactivities of the Republican Party. But now as hungriness very evident that the Democratic party is about to get out of troubles in the coming campaign. The first indication of this came with the meeting of the Democratic National Committee in Washington during which a sharp difference of opinion developed between Chairman Raskob and his friends on the one hand and the dry Southern leaders of the party on the other. Of course, Mr. Raskob and his friends hold the reins of power in the party at the present time but they are not to be given continued control without a fight is evidenced by the recent activities of the Southern leaders. The meeting held recently by Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, Senator Simmons of Virginia, Senator Hull of Tennessee and former Governor Byrd of Virginia indicate that the dry leaders of the party will make some concerted effort to block the efforts of the Northern Democrats under Chairman Raskob to control the party in the next campaign and nominate an out and out wet candidate for the presidency. The issue is still a burning one in the country and politics and it is possible that a rift in the party may result in the election of a few months ago looked like the glowing prospects of the party in the 1932 election.

On the other hand, the rift in the Republican Party between the regulars and the progressives has not been healed. Just what will come of it no one at this time can tell. The economic condition of the country a year hence will probably have a great deal to do with the future developments so far as the Republicans are concerned. Should at this time the progressives have made no announcements for a third party or for a candidate of their own before the Republican convention, and friends of the administration express the confident belief that they will not do so. On the other hand, there have been rumors of a coalition of the progressive quarters during the past few weeks. One report is to the effect that there will be a contest for Republican delegates in the South and that the Republican delegations there may be brought to the convention by Col. Horace A. Mann, a Southern Republican leader, who was prominent in the campaign to win the South for Hoover in 1928. Colonel Mann refuses to confirm or deny these stories except to state that "Southern Republicans in 1932 will be represented by delegates who represent the party in the South and not the federal office-holders." Contesting delegations from the South might be especially important if there should be a real fight for control in the convention. However, Southern Republican leaders like Bascom Slemp of Virginia unhesitatingly state that the Southern Republican delegates will be for Hoover in 1932. The future of the American politics of course is in the "lap of the gods" but at any rate the 1932 campaign will be upon us before we know it.

BETTER DAYS

By George B. Lockwood

There are a few many explanations of any given period of "hard times." There are as many theories as to what causes recovery. But in every organism there are latent powers of recovery which, if given a chance to operate, will restore health after illness. Depressions continue so long and then they have a tendency to terminate by the assertion of powers of recuperation.

Such tendencies to recovery are now in progress in the American business world. The recovery is not rapid, but it is progressive recovery. It is probably just as well that normal business conditions should not return too quickly, else there might be a relapse.

Things are better than they were six months ago. Six months hence, it seems certain, they will be much better than they are today. The year 1932 ought to be a fairly prosperous year. Thereafter it is to be hoped that this country will have no more boom periods. Such hopes have been blasted after every former period of hard times has been succeeded by good business conditions.

But the American people have learned some valuable lessons during the present depression which may not be quickly forgotten. They have learned that speculation is no safe substitute for work and conservative investment. They have learned that something cannot greatly be had for nothing. They have had impressed upon them the importance of thrift as protection against the rigors of the inevitable rainy day.

It seems certain, also, that this period of depression has created a more general feeling of sympathy for the plight of the economic "underdog." The best way to learn human sympathy and understanding is to practice it, as the American people have been compelled to do during the last eighteen months. A fine spirit of fraternity, the evening itself in practical good works has been manifested. The end of the depression will find us not deep in the grips of hard times but with a content for Republican delegates in the South and that the Republican delegations there may be brought to the convention by Col. Horace A. Mann, a Southern Republican leader, who was prominent in the campaign to win the South for Hoover in 1928. Colonel Mann refuses to confirm or deny these stories except to state that "Southern Republicans in 1932 will be represented by delegates who represent the party in the South and not the federal office-holders." REGULATING BUSINESS TO DEATH

Commenting on a proposed bill to make it unlawful for utilities to sell electrical appliances in Indiana, the Indianapolis Commercial recently said: "This is only one example to show to what lengths some legislators will go in their endeavors to regulate business. If they had their way, business generally would almost be regulated to death."

The attack on the electric utilities, it should be understood, will not long be confined to that industry if it is measurably successful. The attackers have as their objective the eventual socialization, at the public expense, of all basic businesses. They are motivated by a social philosophy directly opposed to the democratic principle of individual initiative.

In the United States public utility is one of our greatest taxpayers and employers, both in good and bad times. In giving employment, in contributing to the cost of government, it is an unexcelled influence for stability. Unfriendly utility legislation will, in the long run, be damaging to every citizen and every business.

CHECKING SUN AND RAIN

In Washington one may see records of many patents born to blush unseen. Uniburn children of inventive minds, they spell in many cases tales of real tragedy—inventions which have missed production and riches for their owners by perhaps only a hair's breadth. But there are other dormant patents which contain an element of humor.

Take for example umbrellas. Parasols and umbrellas apparently need stylists rather than inventors. For instance, a new way to "check the sun" has just appeared in smart shops. It follows fairly conventional lines, but is novel—and successful—because made of several layers of fine, soft net, the outer layer a small smart check. This parasol is charming. But it was "styled;" not "invented."

The patent office can show you umbrellas with "wristshields" umbrellas with "shoulder side drops," square and moon-shaped umbrellas whose commercial success has gone no further than the inventors' minds.

Senator Norris of Nebraska let it be known through friends that he had sent word to the President that in case the Muscle Shoals ownership bill was signed, he would be willing to resign from the Senate and accept a job on the commission the bill provided to run the power and fertilizer business. Even to so strong a temptation President Hoover did not yield.

U. S. TERRITORIES VISIT PARIS

Work on the exhibits at the International Colonial Exposition in Paris has virtually been completed, and the Exposition will be opened on May 1, according to schedule. People who travel to France to view this vast project, will "take a trip around the world in a day," according to those who have had the privilege of seeing the exhibits in advance.

Although the part which the United States is taking in this vast exhibition is fairly well known, it is not generally realized that many colorful possessions will also be featured. In one building will be housed exhibits from Samoa, Porto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Hawaii. In another, Alaska's display will be viewed, while exhibits from Guam and the Philippines are placed in a separate building.

The exhibits from Guam consist of maps, photographs, sepia prints, and articles of native life, all of which convey impressions of the region's activities and development. The Philippine display is said to be the costliest of the entire United States group. It includes a display of natural, fishery, forestry and mineral products, manufactured goods, mural paintings, wax statues, relief maps and government publications.

Samoa in advertising the bread-fruit trees, its dwellings, ceremonial costumes, canoes, and its governmental activities in the way of education, law observance, health, and transportation. From Porto Rico comes a display of native products, a reproduction of San Juan Gate and its key, a model of the harbor, historic photographs, maps, and booklets in various languages.

A complete sugar exhibit will feature Hawaii's contribution which will also include a portrayal of the fishing industry as well as numerous articles of native handiwork and industry. Alaska will display totem poles, dog sleds and harness, fishing implements, native craftsmanship, explorers' outfits, seal fur, reindeer hides, and demonstrations of mining methods.

WHAT IS WRONG WITH THE OIL INDUSTRY

Production of oil in the United States doubled between the years 1914 and 1922, and again doubled between 1922 and 1929. There are some 325,000 producing oil wells.

This indicates what is wrong with the oil industry. The evolution of the "gasoline age"—an evolution which restricted itself to a comparatively few years—called for unprecedented progress and activity on the industry's part. Wells were drilled on a wholesale scale, refining processes were improved, a gigantic marketing system was developed. And the industry managed, on short notice, to keep the public supplied with high-quality oil products at a reasonable price.

Then demand ceased increasing, and during 1930 it was less than in 1929. Great surplus stocks of oil were built up, and they had to either be disposed of, stored or wasted. Production could not be curtailed as rapidly as consumption fell off.

Now it is hoped that proration and unitization of oil fields may save the industry from disruption, and prevent waste of our oil resources. Excessive production does no one good, and the public eventually pays. The oil industry's efforts to adjust supply and demand are in the interest of sound industrial conditions.

ECONOMICAL HAPPINESS AFLOAT

One person in every eighteen in the United States today is interested in motor boating. This is a bigger percentage than the best record compiled by the bicycle when it was at the height of its popularity in the gay nineties.

The small cruiser and the popularity of the outboard motor and fast inexpensive runabouts have been the two outstanding contributions to the astonishing current growth in popularity of this form of recreation. It is bound to grow rapidly now that "motor boating" no longer means "yachting" from the financial standpoint. The small cruiser is economical to operate and add nobility to all of the delights of a summer cottage on the water.

Even with the rapid growth of good roads the motor boat is a boghser of every town and village in the thickly populated areas of the United States. Automatically this increases the attractiveness of bays spent on the water.

Families and friendly groups who cruise the shores and inland waters of this country are assured of easy relaxation which spells health and mental as well as physical rest. It is a sport that actually contributes to the health of the nation and, with the wide price range of reliable motor boats now making this pleasure available to practically everybody, will have world-wide vogue in the near future.

Sports such as this which promote health and happiness and which at the same time do not impair the public wealth should be encouraged. Too many men who are valuable to their communities, not to mention their families, shorten their lives by participating in sports for which they are physically unsuited or unprepared.

This does not mean that motor boating is an old man's game. While the head of the family might enjoy the prospect of gathering his little flock together for a congenial adventure on pleasant nearby waters there is nothing more dashing, and again inexpensive, than a zipping dash through the dancing waters in a snappy outboard racer or small comfortable runabout. Motor boating is an ideal sport for the entire family.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S "FINDS" INCLUDE FAMED DIRECTOR

Add to that great list of: D. W. Griffith discovers the name of Hobart Henley, director of "Mothers Cry," which will be featured at the Palace Theatre, next Wednesday and Thursday.

Henley, with only a quarter in his loan pockets, found himself during the winter of 1912 in a situation that has befallen many a good actor before and after him—he was starved and jobless.

He read the classified ads in a borrowed paper, hoping perhaps for a place in a restaurant, since that meant possibly two or three meals a week. Cast, Wagley predicted that a passage of the straits would not be effected before May 15.

Then Senate bill for the improvement of Pine River, which has been watched by the people of this county with so much interest, passed the house on the last day of the session. Our readers are aware that this bill grants extensive portions of state swamp land for the improvement of the navigation of Pine River, the land to be selected from the 25,000 acres now remaining to the state and Antrim counties. When Mr. Mitchell left for capitol, the only recommendation he had was signed and with that official, whoever he may be, it remained to place the matter in the hands of a competent manager. Of course our worker will be gratified by the appointment of Mr. Rutter.

Dr. Leach now occupies a portion of the Ingalls residence on Main Street.

As we go to press there is a rap at the editor's sail, and the devil's in pay.

F. J. Meech has 65,000 railroad ties and 20,000 fence posts in South Arm and the Jordan.

F. W. Mayne, Attorney at law, has been employed as an assistant in the law office of J. Mac Eaton.

Upright, Emery & Co. of this place have 1,000 fence posts, 10,000 ties, and 400 cords of wood for shipment.

Jordan and Boyne rivers are full of fish, pants and logs, and spring fishing will be pronounced under difficulties.

There is some talk of starting a paper mill at Boyne Falls, and should the enterprise materialize the village will be favored with a system of water works for their village. They have now raised over $6000.

Chicago Tribune: Capt. John Wagley, a resident of Charlevoix for thirty-nine years, is in the city, and reports never experiencing a winter like the past. In the straits region the ice at present is nowhere less than two feet thick, and when he left several days ago, teams were daily coming to the village from Petoskey, also from Point St. Ignace, passing both inside and outside of Wagley's steame light-house. Trips to Beaver Harbor with mails and merchandise were made regularly two or three times a week. Capt. Wagley predicted that a passage of the straits would not be effected before May 15.

The Charlevoix Summer Resort

Pursuant to the call dated March 26, 1881, the annual meeting of the Charlevoix Summer Resort was held on the parlors of the Hurdick House, Kaufmann, Tuesday evening, April 12, at 7 o'clock in the absence of the president, the secretary called the meeting to order and on motion by Judson, Dougherty of Michigan was chosen chairman for the meeting.

The secretary's minutes of the meetings for the past year, covering the active exhibits of the association. The report showed the number of certificates to be 268; number of shares 71.

On motion, the reports of both secretary and treasurer were adopted.

Mr. J. L. Belding then offered the following substitute for article one of the by-laws: "The officers of the association shall be a president, a vice president, a secretary and a treasurer, who with five directors, not officers, shall constitute the board of directors, and shall be elected by the annual meeting. Directors shall each hold continue in office for one year, or until his successor has been elected and qualified. The duties of the several officers shall be such as usually appertain to their respective offices."

On motion, such substitution was adopted.

On election of officers being the next business of the meeting, the secretary announced those present and ready to exercise proxies for 34 shares, making a total representation of 129 shares in the meeting. The chairman appointed S. A. Gilkens, teller. The following resulted in the choice of the following:

President—S. A. Gilkens, of Kalkaska.

Vice President—J. S. Estabrook of East Saginaw.

Secretary—G. E. Bardeen of Kalkaska.

Treasurer—George Smiley of Kalkaska.

Directors—Kendall Brooks, Hale W. Page, of Kalamazoo; Geo. W. Lay of Grand Rapids; A. Butters, of Charlevoix; H. A. Waterman, of Detroit.

On motion of Geo. Smiley the directors were ordered to enforce attendance at all meetings.

On motion, the meeting adjourned.

Geo. E. Bardeen, Secretary.

At the directors' meeting immediately following the above annual meeting the following standing committees were appointed for the year:

Finance—H. A. Waterman, J. L. Belding, S. Estabrook.

MICHIGAN HOME MARKETING ASSOCIATION HAS BEEN ORGANIZED

The Marketing Association has been organized to be of assistance to farmers' cooperative societies, both in creating a better market for their roadside products and to guarantee the purchaser a high quality product. This is brought about by having the products to be sold from roadside stands graded by a representative of the College, and a uniform label used. On this label will appear the trade mark of the Association and a guarantee of quality to the purchaser.

No fees or dues are necessary to enroll as a member of the Association. We believe that this Association can offer much service to farm women who have fresh and canned foods to sell as well as fruits and other products. Certain rules and standards are incorporated all of which indicate a desire on the part of the buyer to handle high quality.

If you are interested, or know of a friend who you think would be interested in securing an enrollment blank and getting full details of the new plan, write or telephone County Agent Mellenamp.

That one man designed every machine drive engineering installation in the U. S. Navy? Admiral Byrd has designed every machinery layout on all of the planes in the aircraft carrier U. S. S. Lexington. He was one of the foremost engineers in the world and his inventions are numerous. The design of the propeller used by the Lexington has since been adopted by the Zeppelin.

That 24 young men from the State of Michigan and Toledo, Ohio, will be graduated by the U. S. Navy beginning the 22nd day of April, 1931?

That the above information was furnished by the U. S. Navy Recruiting Station, 645 Randolph Street, 710 Lawyers Building, Detroit, Mich.?

How to train BABY'S BOWELS

Babies, bottle-fed or breast-fed, with any tendency to constipation, would thrive if they received daily half a teaspoonful of this old family doctor's prescription for the bowels.

That is one sure way to train baby bowels to healthy regularity. To avoid the fretfulness, sometimes crying, failure to gain, and other ills of constipated babies.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is good for any baby. For Dr. Caldwell knew the cause of so many of previous troubles was just what babies need to keep their little bowels active, regular and healthy. For Dr. Caldwell specialized in the treatment of women and little ones. He attended over 2000 births without loss of one mother or baby.

Currier and Ives, Pictorial Historians

"The American Express," 1855

Louis Maurer, Last of Currier and Ives Artists

"The Rippers Defense "Fire Fight Fire!"

"The Life of a Hunter" by Tail

"The Fruits of Temperance"

"The Fruits of Intemperance"

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

SOME day when poster reproductions adorned in the attic of the old homestead just one dollar apiece, furious collectors will contend fiercely for a copy of "Currier and Ives' Historical Prints," and the first printing of the first edition will be obtained at any thing short of a king's ransom.

Then perhaps somebody will remember that Louis Maurer, the last surviving member of the firm, is still living in New York, and will be able to tell the story of the prints and their makers.

Which leads to the real reason for the value of Currier and Ives prints. The color helped, but excellence has on their rank. For fifty years they turned out, and continuing for more than half a century their prints were the delight of American life. They went for "dimes apiece" at first, but even the "fancy ones" never sold for more than a dollar. Then came the "dime apiece" period, when the firm was prosperous and its product omnipresent. Finally prosperity ended and Nathaniel Currier, the last surviving partner, died in 1888, a year after the death of Ives, and with the passing of their guiding spirits the firm went into decline.

There's a chance that it's worth several hundred times your grandfather paid for that old "pack-peddler" picture around and sell it at home. He didn't have to pay for collecting a hundred dollars for it, thereby making a handsome profit, but the picture itself cost him only 81 cents and your grandfather didn't realize that he was paying a high price. A much low-high price for the old-fashioned frame. Now could either the "pack-peddler" or your grandfather realize that value more than seven percent might be worth anywhere from $500 to $750 or $1,000 for that picture? Just another one, even up into the thousands.

Yet such is the case for Currier and Ives prints have become so valuable that they are sought by collectors and worth thousands of dollars. And because they are examples of great art, the humblest holder of them are very rare. At an exhibition of Currier and Ives prints held in New York city in 1930 a number of them exceeded better than $500 and one brought $3,000. More than that, a book which contained a set of prints, as 1929 and contained reproductions of 96 of the most popular, was sold for $2,500 in New York. Today, it was a limited edition but that same book today is selling for more than four times its original cost.

And there's another item which reflects the fact that if you have one of these Currier and Ives prints, you have a valuable possession—taking advantage of plenty of attractions for them examples of art. French bibliographers within the last year have been extending their even going to the trouble to make them and and folded and de-opened, just offering them for sale. Currier and Ives prints are not French. However, it is not difficult for the expert to detect these frauds. There is considerable difference between the appearance of a print made by machine and one printed entirely by hand. A print in which the color was applied by the Currier and Ives process of the least brush.

So before you become excited over the discovery of a Currier and Ives print under your first try an "original" cut out a reproduction. And even then don't have dreams of sudden wealth. For there are only a few of these prints which are worth a great deal of money and some of them are worth only a few dollars. In fact, there's no set price for Currier and Ives print. It's worth what you can get for it and that depends upon how badly some collector wants it.

Why all this sudden boom in the prices of a form of art which was popular with one generation of Americans and scorned by the next as "mid-Victorian" and "old-fashioned"? The answer is, of course, that as soon as collectors began using their "Historians of America," as a recent writer has aptly named them, and discovered that they were becoming increasingly rare, the ancient law of supply and demand began to operate. So prices for Currier and Ives prints, as for any other commodity which some one has to sell and which some one else is willing to buy, began to go up.

Exactly the same thing happened when it was discovered that the old yellow-back dime novels were "Americana." It is automatic saving collectors that "what is cheap today may be dear tomorrow" and can concentrate on this exhibiting increase in the value of Currier and Ives prints seriously suggests that "it might pay some provident reader to begin collecting comic strips, for suddenly may want them—who knows?"

by a crew of girls who removed a scene shot colored by an artist. Each girl applied one color according to a formula. Then the print was run through a press and the process repeated for the second color. Each girl specialized on one color and so on.

The rest of the prints which followed at that was true of a great few which equal New York during one of the political nights on record which he called "Clem of the Great Campaign," of December 1840 and 1876. Today "The large sale of this print showed the strong popularity the possibilities of the business, but it was not until 1856 when Nathaniel Currier, the pen and a partner of the "Lucky Lion-Republican of the Whole Dam Lot" began to issued based on Monthly Record Every sixth, least by which was undoubtedly circumference over 100 people purchased," which was an honest purchased, as new newspaper entry in today, that startling decision was to Ann.

In 1850 James A. Ives joined the business to Currier's and the famous firm was on its way to success. Two years later a young Bavarian who had been acquiring practical experience in Germany came to this country and set himself up as a lithographer. Louis Maurer was his name and in time he became one of the Currier and Ives "team." And it is at this point that there is produced an additional link between the Currier and Ives era and the present. For Louis Maurer is still living in New York and recently celebrated his ninety-ninth birthday.

Maurer has had interesting stories of how he went to work for the lithographers for $10 a week, how his salary was raised to $18 a week when he was married, and how he became one of the two hottest free-lance designers of the day. From Tokyo and Highland Mead, and how wages he left them in 1860 he was earning all of $35 a week. But the difference at that time was more than offset by the difference in the purchasing power of money. Probably Louis Maurer doesn't own one of his own prints.

For thirty years Currier and Ives were successful in the advertising parlance and then in time Currier retired with a considerable fortune. The firm, however, continued to operate for a few years more. In 1890 it went out of business, which had been started in this country in 1850 was applied to the Currier and Ives product and even greater numbers of inferior pictures flooded the country. But the desirable products of minor printers found their use of Currier and Ives prints, many copies to bring them back into the fashionable spotlight, and this in turn was the forefather which plays upon the interior part.

So long feels Americans remembering old gay days and old-fashioned pleasures the success of the art of Louis Maurer and others who worked in the frame of Currier and Ives. For it is their work which is commemorating the days of today and those who have these prints should look for the name of the artist on the face of the picture before getting excited over the possibility of its having great value. The Currier and Ives "team" were Maurer, who did wooden scenes and the firm's scenes; Thomas Nahum, who did Americana scenes and farm scenes; and Arthur Bartenweiss and Charles Parsons who did ships and marine scenes.

In general the transportation prints—railroads, steamer trains, etc.—the work of Louis Maurer and the hunting scenes are most valued by collectors. Also the American Express, a famous shown always, recently sold for $500, but Tail's "The Life of a Hunter" is not far behind. A print of this picture topped the New York sale with a price of $3,000. But the scenes who performs to farm one of Thomas Nast's "Harper's" pictures believe that he has an unusual special gold mine in his collection. It is asserted that these were two Currier and Ives prints issued under the title "The Fruits of Intemperance" and "The Fruits of Temperance." The latter side of this print showed the strong temperance

"Graustark" the play by Grace Hayward dramatized from George Barr McCutcheon's novel "Graustark" has been chosen as the senior play this year. A short resume is as follows: Grenfall Lorry, an American meets a Miss Guyenslarker who is touring in the United States. It was love at first sight and after she left the country, he started scratching the world for her.

Grenfall Lorry and friend Harry Anguish find themselves stranded in Edelweiss, the capital of Graustark, an imaginary kingdom located in the Balkans. There he meets Miss Guyenslarker in a most unexpected fashion and is drawn into the intrigue and mystery of the royal government.

In the meantime Harry Anguish and the Countess Dagmar (a close friend of Miss Guyenslarker) have fallen in love, which adds further complications to the plot. The play is well supplied with romance, villiany suspense and lively humor.

The Cast

Grenfall Lorry	Hil Brown
Harry Anguish	Bob Foster
Prince Gabriel	Bill Novak
Baron Dangloss	Pat Moran
Prince Robert	Robert McCall
Prince Lorenz	David Coulter
Sitzky	Lee Shapton
Ostrem	Charles Celmer
Danos	Dixon Warren
Countess Yvonne	Lelo Fessenden
Countess Dagmar	Angie Scott
Therese	Doris Gleason
Yetive (Miss Guyenslarker)	Agnes Brown

J-Hop

Spring is here and with a thing of no less importance than the J-Hop. For doesn't Spring mean every year of our lives? Certainly. But truly to our staid excitable Juniors the 15th of May is the one thing they are living for now. (Which is logical for after they spend all that money they will probably have to go out of business.)

The night of the 15th of May with the lovely mirrodere casino, and the moonlight lawns and the gentle music of the waves slapping against the clean, white sand—say it would be funny, wouldn't it Freshmen, if it should rain? But pardon me, that music part is wrong. The orchestra is composed of a group of heaven sent musicians. The decorations from what we have been able to gather will either be green and white, the Senior colors or tangerine and silver the Junior colors.

Now lets all join hands and wish these Juniors much joy at the forthcoming celebration.

Girl Scouts

The Girl Scouts are putting on a Bake Sale next Saturday, April 25, at the Staley Hardware store. The proceeds from this sale are to be used to cover the expenses of taking the troop to Boyne City, May 2nd to the Girls' Conference of Northern Michigan. Your aid is solicited in making this a big success.

Shorthand and Typewriting Contest

On May the 2nd, Charlevoix will send students to Cheboygan to the District 16 Shorthand and Typing contest. The following will represent our school: Lola Fessenden and Eloise Tillotson in second year typing, Leone Bleck and Lauretta Stutzman, first year typing. Hilda Ogden and Lola Van Dusen, shorthand; Hilda Ogden, Lola Fessenden Eloise Tillotson and Lauretta Stutzman, team typing.

Last year the contestants from Charlevoix made an excellent showing, and gave the leaders a very close run. Dare we venture to hope that this year they will win the coveted honor.

"What Is Success"

Last Wednesday afternoon Dr. Luther of the University of Michigan talked to the students of C. H. S. upon the subject "What Is Success?" He brought out five distinct thoughts which he thoroughly developed. The first was freedom, freedom from imitation. The freedom of being yourself and no one else. The second, breadth, which he said meant a broad-mindedness of character developed only by seeing the other person's side of the question and by arising above our failures. The third, inspiration. He defined this as a quality you derive from books, pictures, persons, etc., which draws out the best in you. The fourth is faith. Faith in God and faith in yourself. The last was perseverance, the ability to keep on after repeated failures which he illustrated by a story of Sir Douglas Mawson at the South Pole.

Civics Class Visited Court Wednesday Morning

Wednesday morning the Civics class went to Court as the conclusion of their studying pertaining to courts. They finished the work in both U. S. Courts and State Courts and it is good to have the court procedure more vividly in their minds. The instructor arranged this clearvance of a Civil case. Judge Gilbert was very considerate by taking time to explain a number of court terms as the case proceeded.

The class received a good idea of what court procedure is like and will probably remember it more completely than anything memorized from books.

Mother Goose

Miss Porter is organizing her pupils so that they can present a nursery rhyme play. The characters Mother Goose and her children have not been chosen as yet.

Hi-Y Induction

Friday, April 10th was a big day for the local Hi-Y group. It was the day that they became full fledged and would add a vast wide Hi-Y members. The ladies of the First Congregational Church served a very lovely dinner to the boys and their guests, the Cheboygan Hi-Y group. The boys from Cheboygan managed the induction very well. The induction was very solemn and impressive. Several of the prominent business men were present and remarked what an impressive ceremony it was. Rev. Lockyer also gave a very inspirational talk.

Ceremonial Meeting

The Campfire Girls ceremonial meeting was held last Wednesday night at which time honors were given. The Wood-gather's rings were confined on the following: Helen Lamont, Rosella Gilling, Lucile McCartney, and Vivian Pike. Emblem of Wood-gather's rank is a ring which is representing the fagot of seven twigs. Seven laws of the campfire.

Hi-Y Breakfast

Last Thursday's Hi-Y breakfast was a bit different from the preceding ones. The difference being that the usual burnt offering was not offered. The menu consisted of oranges (peel yourself style) various kinds of cereals and cocoa. The breakfast was prepared by the two great (that is to be great) chefs, Novak and Coulter. After partaking of the repast we all joined in during the regular discussion period led by Mr. Ditterhen the Hi-Y's faithful leader.

QUALITY SPUDS TO BE TALKED ON PENNSY SOIL TRAIN

Beginning with Ravenna April 20 and following on through to and including Pellston, a potato meeting will be held at 9:30 Central Standard Time each forenoon in the lecture coach of the Lime and Fertilizer Train operating over the Pennsylvania Railroad, April 17th to May 2nd, 1931.

This is in co-operation with the potato interests in Western Michigan which are at present sponsoring a state wide program based upon the production of a higher quality potato.

L. L. Nash of the Economics Department, and H. C. Moore, Chief of Potato Work will be in charge of the meetings.

Mr. Nash will present the present economic status of Michigan's potato industry, using as a basis for his talk, the information he has gleaned from a study of the potato situation which he has been making for the past few months. The facts and figures he has collected are said to be mighty interesting, and should be of great value from a money making standpoint, to the Michigan potato grower when properly interpreted.

Mr. Moore will discuss the state-wide program recently launched by the potato interests, designed to place upon the table stock market a much superior potato.

Western Michigan potato growers are offered this opportunity to get this information first-handed and will be able to find out at this meeting what they can do to regain Michigan's prestige in the potato markets, which for the past two years has been largely usurped by some other states.

It is hoped that at the completion of this series of meetings held in connection with the Soil Improvement Special, that a greater effort will be made by potato growers, each having in mind the goal of producing superior table stock potatoes.

Remember, while the Soil testing is going on in the laboratory car this meeting will be held in the lecture coach.

Bankers, business men and others interested in and dependent on a stabilized potato industry are invited to attend.

Following is the schedule of the Soils Train in this near country; potato meetings to be held in the forenoon; in afternoon each day, lecture coach will be used for soils conference. All meetings Central Standard Time:

Kalkaska, Saturday, April 25th.
Manton, Monday, April 27th.
Lake City, Tuesday, April 28th.
Kingsley, Wednesday, April 29th.
Mancelona, Thursday, April 30th.
Boyne City, Friday, May 1st.
Pellston, Saturday, May 2nd.

THE BRITISH NAVY AND OUR OWN

While the British Navy and our own have so much in common, in point of tradition, equipment and personnel every one realizes how radically different is the method of living on one ship as compared to another. The Nelson, for instance, has no laundry, even the Chief Petty officers wash their own clothes. The Chiefs also sleep in hammocks as compared with the fine airy quarters occupied by our own Chief Petty officers. They are also messed from the general mess. There is apparently no freezing system for making cold water available for drinking purposes, which would be a great hardship to ourselves as a nation and Navy of water drinkers.—Navy News.

Have many Saturday or week-end picnics this spring if you own a car. Take the whole family along. Keep a special box or picnic kit equipped with paper or unbreakable plates, cups, silver, paper napkins, and waxed paper. Then a lunch can be picked up in no time at all and put together after the picnic spot is reached. On your emergency shelf in the pantry keep a few things always in stock, such as canned or package goods suitable for these trips.

Whistler's Extra Monocle

Whistler would play the actor, too, writes Hollis Walter Brown in "Lonely Americans." One day, while he lectured informally, his monocle slipped from his eye and rolled across the floor. A dozen ardent disciples rushed to rescue it from the dust and bread crumbs. He deigned not to touch it, but with an easy flourish drew a fresh one from his waistcoat pocket and adjusted it in his eye as he proceeded with the lecture.

Rev. E. E. Neubecker was a visitor on the mainland this week.

Mr. John Grill and daughter, Winifred, are visitors in Grand Rapids this week.

Earl Gallagher, student at the University of Detroit, arrived home Tuesday for a short visit.

Mrs. A. E. Gallagher and Mrs. N. J. LaFrenlere returned home from Chicago this week.

Mrs. Nelle McLafferty and family after spending the winter in Grand Haven returned home Tuesday.

Jesse Cole who spent the winter with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. G. Cole, left for Chicago.

ENGINEERS FIND ANSWER TO HOME COOLING PROBLEM

Electrified Propeller Keeps Up Lively Circulation of Air Through House.

Engineers know four ways to produce a cooling effect in theaters, hospitals, factories and other big buildings, and, according to the Holland Institute of Technology of Holland, Mich., the same methods might be used in the average home. The air conditioning engineer's four ways of cooling a building "if degrees cost" when it's sweltering hot outdoors, are these:

1. He may pass the air through cold water or cold brine sprays, or over cold coils or by any possible both these.

2. He may evaporate water without adding heat to the air or subtracting it by a mixer compound mechanical process which results in some cooling.

3. He may reduce the moisture content of the air (one of cooling because the air can absorb as to a dehumidifying job).

4. He may, except in the most severe conditions, reduce the effect of coolness without an actual drop in temperature merely by installing equipment to keep the air moving with speedy velocity.

But for most of us, in our homes, says the Holland Institute of Technology, the choice is narrowed down to the first. Last all the first three methods require expensive and complicated machinery. So, to cool our homes in hot weather, we are limited to air motion. There are three classes of equipment that make this possible.

First, there is the ordinary electric fan. On a hot night it can be turned on and directed upon the members of the family, and the velocity of its air currents will produce a decided cooling effect.

Then there is the simplest kind of "attic ventilator," intended to be built into a part of the space of a kitchen window. Any housewife will appreciate its effects in drawing off the heat and odor of the cooking range.

But both the fan and the "attic ventilator" are limited in usefulness. They cannot cool more than one room or a few persons at a time. These limitations do not apply to the third class of home-cooling equipment—the new type of heating system equipped with an electrified propeller which keeps lively currents of air circulating through all the rooms of the home.

There are two kinds of home-heating plants that have this summer-cooling feature, one known as the "vapor-aire" system, and the other as the "super-circulator." During the winter, their function is to move the warmed air from the heat generator through all rooms of the home more rapidly and in greater volume than the ordinary warm air circulating plant will do.

One consequence of this is that it takes less time to warm up the home on cold mornings. Also, these systems maintain more uniform temperatures, which are the more healthy.

MOHAIR IS CLOTH OF KINGS, PRINCES

King Solomon's Temple Was Hung With Veils Made from Hair of Goats.

IMAGINE your surprise if you walked into a shop today and asked for a purple dress, but or the aid were told that it was a color exclusively reserved for the President and his family! Or wanted to purchase a chair and found that only members in the society Blue Book were entitled to such luxuries. That would have been the case years back when purple was a color for kings only, and only the nobility were accorded the privilege of chairs.

In the same way, mohair, a material made from the fleece of the angora goat, was once the privilege of royalty and quite unknown to the commoner. Back in 1031 B. C. King Solomon made use of this luxurious material for his court robes and ordered the veils of the famous Temple to be hung "with cloth from the hair of the goat." And for centuries to come mohair was used only in the palaces of the rich and mighty for draperies, hangings and fine upholsteries. Today in 1931 A. D., mohair velvet or velour is no less cherished but within the reach of every private citizen. The business man commutes to his office in a railway coach whose seats are upholstered in the familiar red or green mohair velvet. At night, he throws himself into an easy chair or davenport finished with his lustrous pile fabric. He takes his family driving in a car lined in the same material and throws a tapering of luxurious mohair velvet over their knees, taking his right to the best as a matter of course, in true American fashion.

The mohair of long ago, however, prized as it was by kings and potentates, was not the rich, pile fabric that is available today. Science has perfected the means of taking out most of the kemp from the fleece and weaving the silky hair into a fabric whose luster and beauty vie with its durability and comfort. Because of the unique physical structure of the individual fibers, mohair takes a perfect, non-fading dye. As mohair is woven on a cotton warp which takes a different shade of dye and must be dyed separately, most effective two-tone color combinations are obtained. Mohair velvet is also made in a variety of hand-blocked patterns with a cut pile or in an interesting loop and pile weave that makes for endless variety of patterns and effects.

While the chief application of mohair is for furniture, automobile and railway coach upholstery, it is also used for clothing, draperies, theatre curtains, miniature golf courses, stuffed animals, trimmings and a variety of other uses.

"Doctrine of Atonement" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Christian Science Churches on Sunday, April 19.

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." (Hebr. 10:22).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, 'Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "When the smoke of battle clears away, you will discern the good you have done, and receive according to your deserving. Love is not hasty to deliver us from temptation, for Love means that we shall be tried and purified." (p. 22).

BRILLIANT CAST ASSEMBLED IN "SIN TAKES A HOLIDAY"

One of the most brilliant casts ever assembled in any motion picture distinguishes Constance Bennett's Pathé star production "Sin Takes a Holiday," which will have its premier showing at the Palace Theatre next Saturday and Sunday.

Miss Bennett's role in this picture is one that she plays to the manner born and in the somewhat risque situations which abound, she displays glimpses of diamond-pure lustre.

As her leading man, the beautiful star of "Rich People," "This Thing Called Love" and "Common Clay", has Kenneth McKenna, former Broadway stage player who made an enhancing bid in "Men Without Women." MacKenna produced, directed and starred leads in many New York stage successes, including "The Big Pond", before talking pictures claimed him.

Playing MacKenna's rival is Basil Rathbone, who appeared with Norma Shearer in "The Last of Mrs. Cheyney." Rathbone, who started his theatrical career on the London stage, was featured in "This Mad World," "The Bishop Murder Case" and "Lady of Scandal."

As Ila La Roy has gone the feminine menace role. Miss La Roy's work in "Dynamite," "The Love Typ," "The Bachelor Girl" and "The Delightful Rogue" won her a picture contract. Helen Johnson, blonde stage and film player, has the role of a society girl.

Most character roles are played by Louis Natteau and John Roche, experienced film players with stage backgrounds. As a sophisticated society woman, Kendall Lee adds an air of authority to the cast. Marcel Friday, selected by Henry Clive, the artist, at California's "gold coast" and designated by Florenz Ziegfeld as one of America's foremost beauties, also has a society girl role. Fred Walton, veteran character actor, plays a butler.

Paul L. Stein directed "Sin Takes a Holiday." Among his directorial successes are "One Romantic Night," "The Private Affair" and "This Thing Called Love." Robert Milton and Dorothy Cairns wrote the original story and the photoplay is by Horace Jackson.

NAVY AND THE RADIO

Today the Navy has a radio system connecting Washington with its fleets, direct or through relays, by point to point lines between Washington, Porto Rico, Panama, the west coast, Alaska, Hawaii, the Philippines, Guam and Samoa, and from these main lines connects directly to ships through 170 coastal traffic, and direction finder stations which dot our shores. Last year some 60 million words of traffic were handled by naval systems, and 380,000 bearings were given, without cost, to ships and aircraft, to assist in thick weather navigation. This system is not in any way a competition of our great commercial systems, handling solely government traffic.—Navy News.

JOSEPH R. COOPER CELEBRATES BIRTHDAY

Joseph R. Cooper celebrated his eighty-first birthday anniversary Monday, April 27, not quietly, nor was he alone as thirty-four friends assisted in the celebration. Thoughtful friends too, as they brought with them refreshments and good things to eat. Along the latter line was a magnificent cake of a size sufficient for all to have a splendid helping. Of the other line of refreshments there was grapejuice in quantity. Some say the grapejuice as a drink was pronounced harmless, while others said drink it with caution or as one of those present said

"There are serpents by the fountains
And thorns in fairest flowers,
While the drama of life is startling
In this queer old world of ours."

OLD RESIDENT DIES IN CHICAGO

TAKEN ILL SUDDENLY; DIED WEDNESDAY, APRIL 23

B. Frank Wrisley, an old time resident of Charlevoix, passed away last Wednesday, April 23.

Mr. Wrisley has been a resident of Cleveland, Ohio, for some time, and last week went to Chicago, to visit a daughter, where he was taken very suddenly as the result of a stroke.

He was the eldest son of George Wrisley, an early pioneer of Charlevoix, who lost his life in the Champlain disaster, many years ago.

Mr. Wrisley is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Jessie A. Bell, of Chicago and Mrs. Frank Robby, of Kalamazoo.

The remains arrived here Thursday and the funeral service was held at the Baptist Church Friday. Interment at Riverside.

RENDER VERDICT OF NOT GUILTY

JURY OUT EIGHTEEN MINUTES; LEFT, MARTIN DEFENDANTS

A case in which Carl Left and Charlie Martin of Beaver Island, were defendants, charged with malicious destruction of property, occupied two days time in the circuit court last week. Eighteen minutes after the members of the jury retired to consider the evidence they returned a "not guilty" verdict.

The case came up for trial on complaint made by a commercial fisherman, one Henry Sullivan of Cross Village, who claimed that the defendants cut and maliciously damaged certain fishing nets owned by him and used in the straits region off Cross Village during the fall of 1930.

Following the complaint the two defendants, Left and Martin, were seized and placed in the county jail where they were detained for three days before a warrant issued and without opportunity to give a bond for appearance either for examination or trial. Later and after warrant was issued, both defendants promptly furnished bond and were released and as herein mentioned after a trial which took up two days time of the court were exonerated by a jury of their peers eighteen minutes after the case was in their hands for a verdict.

Naturally the defendants in the case are jubilant over their complete vindication of the charges brought against them while the complainant, a man by the name of Sullivan, who lives at Cross Village, probably is less satisfied with the decision of the jurors who sat in the case.

PASSION PLAY IMPRESSIVE

TAKES PLACE EVERY 10 YEARS; NOW IN MOTION PICTURES

In 1633, the village of Oberammergau, in Bavaria, was visited by a terrible plague. On its cessation the entire population made a vow to perform the passion play of our Saviour every tenth year, out of gratitude, and as a means of religious instruction—a vow which has ever since been faithfully observed.

The inhabitants of this secluded village have a rare union of artistic ability and cultivation, with perfect simplicity. Their familiarity with religious subjects is even beyond what is usual in the Alpine parts of Germany, and the spectacle is looked upon with the same feeling with which it originated—devout and edifying. The impersonator of Christ considers his part as act of worship. He and all the rest who are to participate in the enactment are selected for their holy life, and are consecrated to their work with prayer and fasting. In fact it is the ambition of every child in the village to act a part in this great event, and in order to do so they must show in their daily life that they are worthy of such an honor.

Every village girl has an ambition to portray the part of Mary, the mother of Christ. In order to attain they must not, even in thought, do anything contrary to the virtuous and pure character of the mother of our Saviour. Not to be considered fit to take part, however small, in this grand play, is in Oberammergau, considered a great disgrace. To take a part away from an actor is a shame that can hardly be borne.

When properly equipped and presented there is not an attraction before the world today in the way of entertainment, so impressive, so pleasing, soulstirring, heart-reaching and uplifting as is this wonderful creation in moving picture form. That it is doing the world a great good no one can deny. How grand the opportunity to witness these clear, beautiful, life-motion pictures passing before us, unfolding in the most convincing and pleasing manner the scenes and incidents in the Christ life heretofore pictured in words only and not understood by all.

This picture is to be shown at the Methodist Church Friday evening at 7:45.

Val Scroggie of Detroit spent the week end with Charlevoix friends. He was accompanied on the trip by Mrs. Ida Brown, a resident here some years ago, who was a guest of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Graves during her recent visit.

LOCAL K. OF P. MEMBERS ENTERTAINED AT E. JORDAN

Several members of the local K. of P. order met with fellow members from Central Lake at East Jordan a few nights ago, where they were entertained by South Lake Lodge with an exceptionally fine dinner and a three way cribbage session.

As in former cribbage games East Jordan players won first place with a score of 935 points. Charlevoix second with 887 points thereby taking the lead of Central Lake contenders, who in previous games held second place. This session was disastrous to Central Lake, the players of the team dropping to 603.

Regardless of final results the general report is to the effect that an enjoyable evening was spent by all alike.

M. S. C. EXTENSION PROJECT MEET

TWO HUNDRED CHARLEVOIX CO. WOMEN TO ATTEND

The two hundred women of this county who enrolled in the Michigan State College Extension Project for 1930-31 are coming to Charlevoix Wednesday, May 6th, for their Achievement Day program which will be held in the Congregational Church from 10 a. m. to 3:30 p. m., Central Standard Time. Luncheon will be served at noon at 35c per plate.

There will be an exhibit of household conveniences in the lecture room. Certificates will be granted to the women who have completed the project.

The afternoon session beginning at half past one will be of unusual interest as a program of community singing, readings, special musical numbers and addresses has been arranged.

Mrs. Lydia Ann Lynde of Lansing, Child Care and Training Specialist, will be the principal speaker.

Remember the place and date—Congregational Church, Charlevoix, Wednesday, May 6th. Visitors are welcome.

4-H CLUBS END YEAR IN RECORD PERFORMANCE

Charlevoix and Boyne City were the scenes of the largest and most enthusiastic gathering of rural boys and girls ever held in the county, last Thursday and Friday, when the Achievement Days were held. At Charlevoix over 200 parents and children saw the exhibit consisting of 58 individual collections of Clothing Club displays and 39 Handicraft Club exhibits. It was most inspiring to see the dresses and other garments made by these rural girls, many of them only ten, eleven and twelve years of age. Then to see the numerous articles made by the boys, such as orchard bird houses, tabarets, foot rests, and many others, just made a person realize the value and training of the huge 4-H Club Program being carried on by over 200 boys and girls. A feature of both Achievement Days was the "Style Show," in which all the girls participated. It just made the heart beat faster to see over 75 girls appear on the stage wearing the dresses that were made with their own hands.

Each school also added spice and variety to the occasion by having by having short, snappy 5 minute programs. Mr. A. G. Kaeuner and Miss Syrra Wixson of the Michigan State College Club Department were present and occupied important roles on the program. In recognition of having satisfactorily completed the requirements, Achievement Certificates were awarded the boys and girls. Also local champions in each club were announced.

In Boyne City at the conclusion of the program the most important and most highly esteemed awards were announced, namely the County Championships.

Congratulations to the following County Champions in Charlevoix County:

Clothing Champions

First year, Eleanor Behling, Boyne City, Knop School.

Second year, Christina Withers, Charlevoix, Marion Center.

Style Champion

Catherine Richardson, Charlevoix, Norwood School.

Handicraft Champions

First year Junior, Stanley Kulpa, Charlevoix, Marion Center.

DEATH TAKES LOCAL YOUTH

HAD BEEN IN FAILING HEALTH; END COMES SATURDAY

Stanley Heise, sixteen year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Heise, of this city, passed away very suddenly last Saturday.

He had been in failing health for the past year, and was obliged to give up his work in High School, but had not been confined at home.

The deceased is survived by his parents and a sister, Lila, of Lansing, and a brother, Junior.

Funeral services occurred Tuesday afternoon at the Methodist Episcopal Church in this city.

The Junior Class of the Charlevoix High School of which he was a member attended in a body.

"NAUGHTY FLIRT" FAST STEPPING COMEDY-DRAMA

"Naughty Flirt," Alice White's latest First National starring vehicle, is coming to the Palace Theatre May 5 and 6.

The story, which deals with the efforts of a daring and devil-may-care rich girl to win the love of one of her father's trusted employees and his unconventional ways of reforming her before he is willing to marry her, is strikingly fresh and original.

Director Edward Cline filled it with comedy and new angles, and there is a surprise in every situation. Moreover, some big dramatic punches appear in the midst of fast-steping comedy.

Splendid acting is done by Miss White, leading man Paul Page, who is a new and interesting screen figure and Robert Agnew, while Myrna Loy has the vampiest role she ever played.

The picture is an entire departure in roles for Alice, who appears at her very best in the new sort of part.

GILL - SNYDER

Mr. Vernon M. Snyder and Miss Jean P. Gill were united in marriage Saturday evening at the Congregational manse. Rev. G. R. Parker officiated.

The young couple were accompanied by Miss Clementine Browe and Mr. Don Hiller, both of this city. The bride is a Charlevoix young lady and the groom is from Petoskey. Mr. Snyder is employed on the S. S. Sumac.

FIRE DEPARTMENT CALLED

A small fire called the fire department to the residence of Mrs. William Russell Thursday forenoon. The damage was nominal in amount and confined to a partition in which the fire originated.

George Cook, a well known resident of Charlevoix, and an expert meat cutter in the employ of the Korth Market, has been in a very critical condition at the hospital for the past week.

A. F. Young and F. D. Thompson of Boyne City spent Friday in Charlevoix on business.

Captain C. C. Allers of St. James spent several days in Charlevoix last week on business.

A LOGICAL ATTITUDE

Recently the legislature of Minnesota was considering a bill to forbid the purchase or ownership of concealable weapons by persons not licensed by a judge or chief of police. Under it, according to the Minneapolis Journal, an honest man could not get a license to own a gun for the protection of his home except at considerable trouble, including the solicitation of affidavits of good character.

"It is human experience," says the Journal, "that most honest men will not go to the trouble, outside of certain businesses. The honest man thinks he may need the gun some time. But he is not sure. The criminal, on the other hand, is dead sure he is going to need a gun, not once in his life, but frequently. So he is armed cap-a-pie, no matter what the law says.

"So the act proposed for Minnesota would disarm honest men without disarming gangsters. Almost the same law has been in force and has long done in New York. . . . Admittedly, the measure would place a brake on impulsive homicide by men previously unarmed, suddenly enraged citizens could not promptly equip themselves to wreak vengeance on those responsible for their ire.

"But cannot this same purpose be served by enactment, not of an owner's license law, but of a law requiring three days' delay between the ordering of a pistol and delivery to the buyer? Under the three-day plan, addresses given by prospective purchasers could be verified. . . . Young Stalins leaning toward crime mildly insane cranks, notoriously quarrelsome citizens, could be kept from buying guns.

The Journal has taken the logical stand. To make it impossible for the honest citizen to legally own a gun is an encouragement to the criminal.

PROTECTING THE CHILD

Many communities are planning programs for May Day emphasizing child health and accident prevention. This is part of the general year round safety campaign conducted in schools and various club-protective organizations.

At a time when accidents and deaths to adults have constantly risen, child fatalities have been on the down grade. This is the direct result of the teaching of fundamentals of accident prevention and good health in schools. It is an invaluable work, not only because of the lives now being saved, but because it is paving the way for safer streets, highways and homes in the future.

The astonishing total of accidents among adults is due largely to their refusal to take safety teaching seriously. The child's mind, being malleable and open, is extremely receptive to safety instruction when presented vividly and in an interesting manner. And that which is learned in the primary and grade schools, by the child, will be part of his character as an adult.

There is nothing esoteric about safety. It is the simplest of things, depending on a few commonsense rules and principles. Care, watchfulness, courtesy—such factors as those, that can be exercised by every one, young or old, can almost wholly do away with accidents of all kinds. Carelessness, slothfulness and incompetence are now claiming thousands upon thousands of lives each year—more than 30,000 in automobile accidents alone.

HIGH COST OF THE CALENDAR

Manufacturers of business and farm machinery and equipment are being asked to outline the changes in dating devices which will be made necessary if the League of Nations approves a change in the existing calendar. The necessary alterations in dating machinery will differ widely according to the nature of the reform adopted by the League. Estimates of the cost of these changes will receive consideration in the arguments for and against the most feasible plans for calendar reform which have been submitted to the League.

The old-fashioned calendar which is now in use is undoubtedly expensive alike to business, science, education and other interests. The World Calendar Association estimates that a conservative change in the present system of measuring time would mean a considerable saving each year to many outstanding groups of industrial enterprises. There would be a saving of a considerable amount in the single item of annual printing of calendars, which would no longer be required under a regulated year in which each month would be identical year after year.

American observers abroad report that calendar changes are not considered inevitable by the best-informed students of international opinion. Within five years, according to one authority, the old calendar will be thrown into the discard, and civilized nations will begin a new reckoning of time and a new system of dates, designed to meet modern conditions and requirements, from the astronomical, social, commercial, scholastic and religious standpoints.

From a newspaper correspondent who has been close to the League of Nations since its inception comes the following summary of the present situation: "The world-wide movement for calendar reform has been gaining momentum for more than five years in the League of Nations it has strong official support from the British delegates, and keen interest is now being shown by Germany, France, Belgium, Switzerland, Spain and Italy. The demand for calendar reform is non-political. It comes from business, commerce, finance, education and science."

General belief is that the international convention may reject the proposed 13-month calendar as unscientific, because it fails to recognize the astronomical division of the year into seasons or quarters. Agreement is likely to be reached on a basis of a new 12-month improved calendar divided into equal quarters of 91 days each.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN WRITES HIS MEMOIRS

Announcement that Charlie Chaplin is writing his autobiography has stirred a wide-spread interest among his fans and admirers in every country of the globe. It is particularly appropriate that this announcement came along precisely on Chaplin's birthday, April 16.

Since the film star was born in London 42 years ago, and served his apprenticeship to the stage as a juvenile comedian in the London music halls, Chaplin has been equally well known in the United States as in England. Law has long done in New York. . . . Admittedly, the measure would place a brake on impulsive homicide by men previously unarmed, suddenly enraged citizens could not promptly equip themselves to wreak vengeance on those responsible for their ire.

"But cannot this same purpose be served by enactment, not of an owner's license law, but of a law requiring three days' delay between the ordering of a pistol and delivery to the buyer? Under the three-day plan, addresses given by prospective purchasers could be verified. . . . Young Stalins leaning toward crime mildly insane cranks, notoriously quarrelsome citizens, could be kept from buying guns.

The Journal has taken the logical stand. To make it impossible for the honest citizen to legally own a gun is an encouragement to the criminal.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By Frank F. Litchert

A significant statement came out of Washington the other day to the effect that for the first time in the history of the United States more people are now leaving the republic than are entering it. This means that the tide of immigration, which set in at the very beginning of our history has turned, temporarily at least, and that we are now losing more aliens than we are gaining. The change is due partly of course to the depression, but it is accelerated by our new immigration laws and by the efforts now being made by our government to help in the unemployment situation, by curtailing the number of aliens immigrants, and assisting those who desire it, to return to their native homes.

The present administration is now making the most energetic effort to put a history to solve this alien problem. Four plans have been adopted to the work: first, consular visas are to be withheld abroad from prospective immigrants who are considered likely to become public charges after they have arrived in the United States, second, the Department of Labor is making a special effort to round up and deport aliens who have no right under our laws to remain in the United States; third, the Department is searching out deserters from the alien crews recently paid off in Boston by the Supreme Court to be able to deportation regardless of the long duty they have spent in America; fourth, the governm ent is offering free transportation back to their native countries to return to the homes of their birth.

The first of these policies was announced several months ago. In view of the depression and growth of unemployment, it was deemed advisable to permit to enter the country persons of quotarism means who would be able to support, or to become public charges, in a nation whose charitable facilities are already overtaxed. As a result of this policy our consular representatives abroad were instructed to refuse visas to prospective immigrants who could not show pretty conclusively that they would not have to call for public help if permitted to come into the United States. This policy has resulted in checking the flow of immigration to a considerable degree. The Department of Labor has also commenced a special effort to rid the country of aliens, who were smuggled into the country and have no legal right to remain here. Many of these, it is said, are radicals, against the present form of government in the United States. There are said to be 100,000 aliens of this kind in the United States.

The Supreme Court recently held that a man who deserted from a foreign ship to remain in the United States was subject to deportation no matter how long he had been here. The Department is looking after cases of this kind, too. Then a little known provision of the law of 1927 was dug out which authorizes the Labor Department to transport back to his native country any alien who has become a public charge within three years of his arrival here and desires to go home. It is said that they are already 200 applications for back home trips by aliens of this kind, and that it is expected the number will reach 200 a month when the provision becomes generally known. It is to be understood that aliens who go back under this provision go back "on good standing" and are not to be characterized as having been deported.

It is said that immigration has been reduced by 10,000 a month through the force of visas that 1,500 a month are being deported and that 200 a month will soon be going back voluntarily. There were only 3,147 alien admittances in February against 13,585 in February, 1926. Surely this energetic action of the administration is helping to solve the immigration problem. In reducing and restricting immigration America is not asking to assert its superiority to other nations. We well realize the value that immigration has been to the nation in the past. But times have changed now and with about 5,000,000 of our people now unemployed, certainly the government is acting wisely in its present immigration policy.

AUSTRALIA'S FINANCIAL CRISIS

Australia is now facing a crisis in her government finances. Rene Leys, Briefly, Mr. Lang, prime minister of New South Wales, proposes that the Australian commonwealth and state governments shall pay no more interest on their bonds. Throughout the world, until, first, Britain scales down Australia's war debt as we did Britain's, and, second, the private bondholders of bonds agree to accept a reduction of interest to 3 per cent, the Australian government will consistently refuse to retire to the bonus of their birth.

The importance of Mr. Lang's proposal comes from the fact that the New South Wales debt exceeds that of any of the other states and that he frankly advocates partial repudiation. Besides doing away with the adoption of the plan of open repudiation but it does face an alternative he recommended by Mr. Theodore, federal treasurer, which means inflation that would further increase the present crisis.

The sound but drastic plan to reduce the Australian government expenditures, to revise old age, invalid, and war pensions downward as it elected too much opposition to be adopted. Before the war, Australia had embarked on ambitious but ill-considered socialistic plans that fastened extraordinarily heavy charges on the public treasury. The war placed additional strains on an already hard-pressed treasury. The government hesitates to inaugurate the only sound method of restoring Australian solvency.

Advices from London indicate that Britain will come to the financial aid of her dominion if necessary to prevent his bankruptcy. But this will only mean an additional burden on the treasury of the United Kingdom. Even schoolboys should realize by now that governments as well as individuals must balance budgets, but enthusiastic advocates of state aid for various worthy enterprises always forget the teaching of experience and cheerfully look into the government's purse for some miraculous supply of gold only to find that the government has no money except that provided by the taxpayers. Our Congress and state legislatures will do well to ponder Australia's condition when confronted with wholesale demands for government aid, all of which have to be financed by the citizens' money.—Scientific American.

MILITARY TRAINING

Armed with the inevitable petition of 100,000 names, a delegation is converging on Washington to urge Congress and the President to outlaw military training for American colleges and universities. The delegation is said to be made up of Red radicals as well as pacifists.

In most schools the training is no way compulsory. Those who take such courses, whether by election or school rules, spend but a few hours a week in studies that embrace drill, rifle practice and military history and science. They are physically and mentally benefited. Supranaturalistic theory which might readily be engaged is more harmful occupations is directed into useful channels.

The officers of the United States army, who conduct this training are selected for their good records and high appreciation of their responsibilities in supervising the boys. Fellow of material, cases of contretion have been favorable for months. Now the weather is favorable for quick completion of your improvement. Now is the right time.

DID YOU KNOW?

That the total electric power of the United States is 38 million horsepower, would, if applied to the production of shells shooting upwards, keep a battleship gun with 16 inch bore firing a shell a day, or would supply the electric power for heat needs of nine million people.

That the first land ever carried by an American Man-O'War as a part of her crew was kidnapped at Tripoli?

That the Navy maintains 235 submarines located in important cities throughout the United States to aid naval defense in their efforts to join the Navy? There are six of these stations in Michigan and upper Ohio.

That the above information was furnished by the U. S. Navy Recruiting Station, 645 Randolph Street, 710 Lawyers' Building, Detroit, Mich?

NOW'S THE TIME TO BUILD

The time is coming rapidly when there should be an increase in building in this community as well as in the other progressive towns of the nation. If there is not an increase in building activity it will be because the people do not realize that the opportune time is at hand. One of the things counted on to restore normal prosperity is the building industry.

How often we have heard in past years the expressions of our friends in the effect that they would like to build themselves a new home but could not do so on account of the high cost of construction.

Well, all of that has changed now. Costs of building are extremely low. They are not going lower; very soon they will rise, and those progressive home builders, homeowners who have not availed themselves of rock-bottom prices will be holding regrets rather than profits. The saving is true of owners whose property is in need of repair. See your contractor now; it will never be done at lower cost.

Money is available now at reasonable rates for the financing of new realty enterprises. Property is about to be re-appraised for taxation and the appraisal, which will stand during six years of advancing values, promises to be favorable to the taxpayer. Property values, while they never fluctuate as widely as some other forms of investment, have jumped. They are bound to rise in the wake of business revival.

The recourse, the prospective homeowner, who desires to follow the wise course of getting in at the bottom of the upward swing of the trend. Delays of material, cases of contretion have been favorable for months. Now the weather is favorable for quick completion of your improvement. Now is the right time.

MICHIGAN BELL TELEPHONE CO.

An upstairs telephone saves running down to answer calls

Often, when you are upstairs, the telephone rings. Perhaps it is the grocer, or your husband, or Aunt Sue.

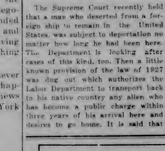
Each time, you must hurry down the steps to answer, and then plod back up again to finish your work.

An extension telephone installed upstairs would save that wasted energy. And at night, it would be a safeguard in emergencies, such as sickness or fire.

Such telephone convenience and safety costs surprisingly little . . . . less than 3 cents a day.

To place an order, just call the Telephone Business Office.

FORD RELIABILITY



Long, hard use shows the value of good materials and simplicity of design

EVERYWHERE you go you hear reports of the good performance and reliability of the Ford.

One owner writes—"The Ford Tudor Sedan I am driving has covered 59,300 miles through all kinds of weather. It is still giving perfect satisfaction."

Another owner describes a trip of 5217 miles in 95 hours over bad roads and through heavy rain and sleet in the mountains. "Throughout the entire trip," he writes, "the Ford performed excellently and no mechanical trouble of any kind was experienced. The shatter-proof glass undoubtedly saved us from serious injury when a prairie chicken struck the windshield while we were traveling at 65 miles an hour."

See the nearest dealer and have him give you a demonstration ride in the Ford. Then, from your own personal experience, you will know that it brings you everything you want or need in a motor car at an unusually low price.

Lenny Hamlin left yesterday for Milwaukee to resume his position as engineer on the tug J. H. Merrill.

Chas. Lamoreaux, John Cook and George Hamlin left Saturday for Traverse City to work on the new opera house.

John T. Kirkpatrick, of this place, has taken a contract to build a large resort hotel at Howard's Harbor near Traverse City. Saturday he left for the place, having with him the following Charlevoix workmen: S. Mann, Wm. Garland, Wm. Phelps, Irving Henry, John Conley, M. J. Hartlett, Ed. Wood, Charles Wheeler, Thos. Sharpton, John Sevas, Wm. Wood, Chas. Hall, Frank Wilson, Jr., Anson Brown goes as cook in the boarding house. Mr. Kirkpatrick will employ about forty men on the job.

Charlevoix is to be treated to a musical feast. It is announced that the Addison Quartette of Elk Rapids will give a concert at Lewis' Grand Opera House on the evening of May 5th. The quartette is composed of Miss Sarah Daniels, Miss S. B. Kinyon, J. E. Daniels and S. F. Lackey, with Prof. Arthur Nelson, of this place, as accompanist. Most of our readers are already acquainted with a part of the quartette, and that the concert will be a choice musical event goes without saying.

These parties are very enjoyable, and Although we never participate, we are not one of those who consider them evidences of total depravity. Let the young folks dance—there are enough old heads among them with young hearts, to keep the going ones and maidens within due bounds. But the youth of Charlevoix need no straight-jackets, they are a sensible lot, and are, as a rule, good boys and girls, as well as good dancers. The closing event of the season occurred at Lewis' Hall Thursday evening, about forty couple being present.

AUTOMOBILE LARGEST USER OF SEVEN AMERICAN INDUSTRIES

MOHAIR GOES INTO AUTOMOBILES

Estimate 100,000,000 Yards in Use on Nation's Highways.

TODAY'S automobile is almost entirely an achievement of our natural resources or products. With the exception of rubber which is grown in Africa, India or South America but manufactured in this country, all the basic materials that go to make an automobile are produced in our soil. Steel, sunbait, plate glass, nickel and lead are not only American products, but are, together with rubber, used to a greater extent in making cars than for any other purpose.

Practically every state in the Union contributes to these materials, either in their raw state or in their manufacture. For example, our youngest and fastest growing livestock industry, that of angora goats, provides the mohair which is used in making mohair velvet for automobile upholstery. Some idea of the demand for this durable fabric, otherwise known as cotton, is gained from the fact that one hundred million yards, or 3,000 bales, are annually consumed in and sent to the automobile factories.

Mohair is the fleece of the Angora goat, so named because originally it was first successfully raised in Turkey, and the United States imported millions of fleece annually, but with the introduction of the goats

Poisons absorbed into the system from souring waste in the bowels, cause that dull, headachy, sluggish, bilious condition; coat the tongue; foul the breath, sap energy, strength and nerve force. A little of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will clear up trouble like that, gently, leaves purity in a hurry. The difference it will make in your feelings ever night will prove its merit to you.

Dr. Caldwell studied constipation for over forty-seven years. This long experience enabled him to make his prescription just what most sufferers need; people and children need to make only slight changes in their daily habits, eat simple, plain, wholesome food, exercise in the open air, drink plenty of water, and use Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin as it is called, is the most popular laxative-drugless aid.

Process Saves Much Oil

The first thing oil and water do for health any one knows, refined in one purpose in some of the bathing fonts in New York and Pennsylvania, where oil wells have been sunk to flow again by throwing their waste products into the streams. Water in pumped from wells, mixes naturally with the crude oil as it comes through the earth into other wells that have been abandoned but have not been flooded. Or an elaborate process is in use at an extensive refinery and experts estimate that some of the wells still coming will yield a second crop of 30 to 40 gallons to the barrel.

Ohio Civic Service Medal Recalls Heroes of 1780

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

This is a story of civic heroism in a much-deplored "age of materialism." It is the story of how a typical small Middle Western city has honored itself by honoring by a unique way the men whose names it bears and how it is preserving for its everlasting benefit one-fifth of which it is proud.

In the story of 1780 there are three names that are known to all who have the names of Van Wert, Paulding and Williams. They are joined with the event that all in former days through the south into other wells that have been abandoned but have not been flooded. Or an abandoned well is used as an extension supply and experts estimate that some of the wells still coming will yield a second crop of 30 to 40 gallons to the barrel.

The most recent history some time in years ago when a Van Wert business man, driving somewhat lonely was the study of American history, and the name of Van Wert, and where else was he when the city was named. His business was C. A. L. Hemmer, the descendant of a John H. of Franch, Hampshire who emigrated to America in colonial time. The study of Arnold's treason and the capture of Andre by the three New York militiamen is a familiar one in most American schools, and those who were the men for whom the city was named. Their

INDIAN PRINCESS

An Indian Princess from the Chippewa tribe talked to the high school assembly and Junior High, Friday morning. She was representing Dr. T. B. Anderson and gave a very interesting talk on Hiawatha.

She told of the superstitions of her tribe and how they believed in keeping sickness away from her people many years ago. This was by a member of the tribe casting himself over the Niagara Falls and then would make all evil spirits disappear. Later the chief of the tribe became more intellectual and did not believe these superstitions. When asked her name in his tribe a very beautiful Princess waited to be married but in order to would not have to do this picked up a gold to tell him a better way to bring health to his tribe. The spirit of his wife came down and told him to clean with their tools used and not proper food and have lots of exercise, sunshine and sleep. They did toward these improvements and found that it cured their sickness and that no longer had to sacrifice a maiden to get well.

She also told us many other superstitions and showed us how they broke by using them. Then Lillie Omena, the Princess' daughter, sang two Indian songs.

Announcements—
Beginning next Sunday evening the Young People's Service will be at 8:00 o'clock.

Next Mid-Week service is open to all. The attendance is fair but we should like to have more. The program is in the nature of a Bible study and discussion group. At present we are studying the book of Genesis.

Next Sunday two will be received into the church on confession of Faith.

The last church-night of the season will be held May 14.

Sunday, May 10, is the day that has been set aside as Mother's Day. This is one of the night days when the flag of the United States should be displayed. Our church is planning to observe this day in a very appropriate manner. There will be special music and a special sermon. A suitable gift will be given to the person not and the oldest mother present. If those are any who will offer the use of their cars to bring those unable to such please report same to the pastor. If there are any mothers who would appreciate such assistance will you please make the fact known also.

Until five more weeks of school! That thought brings cheers from the youngsters who have spent from nine to ten months in the school room. But there is a feeling of concern up on the part of the parents. "What will we do with Mary and Jack?" The Congregational Sunday School will offer a solution. Beginning immediately after school is out we are planning to open a Daily Vacation Bible School. The work will be in charge of Miss H. R. Parker who has considerable experience in the Vacation Bible School work. She was connected for several years with the Kent County Sunday School Association, at Grand Rapids and had charge of several schools in different parts of the city. While in Watervliet she directed several. With this background Miss Parker is well prepared to care for this proposed school.

The posters that were displayed in several business places advertising the Mother and Daughter banquet that was held Wednesday evening were made by the Congregational Art Club. One does not have to be connected with the church to join the club.

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "O Israel, return unto the Lord thy God; for thou hast fallen by thine iniquity. I will be as the dew unto Israel: he shall grow as the lily, and cast forth his roots as Lebanon." Hosea 14: 1, 5.

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "To ascertain our progress, we must learn where our affections are placed and whom we acknowledge and obey as God. If divine love is becoming nearer, dearer and more real to us, matter is more unreal and distant." (p. 291)

LEGIONNAIRES ATTEND CONVENTION SUNDAY

In spite of the raw weather, six lone members of Leslie Shapton Post, American Legion, attended the district convention at Mackinac City, Sunday, April 26th. At this meeting it was voted by the delegates to hold the next district convention, Sunday, May 3, at Charlevoix, at a date in the month of June, 1931, to be fixed later on. It is the present intention to hold the banquet at the Charlevoix Beach Hotel.

Last Tuesday afternoon and evening members of the post turned out in force and, netted the grounds around the legion hall on East Clarbord. A casual inspection of the scene of action will reveal the fact that considerable progress was made. Anyway, all of the participants were observed to do full justice to the tasty potluck supper that rewarded their labors. For the first time, the snappy logic notes of the mess call

FUNDS FOR HOMES SUPPLIED BY BANKS

By ROMI C. STEPHENSON
President American Bankers Association

A LARGE portion of the funds required in home building always has been furnished by banks. They have saved unnecessarily a deep interest in the performance of this feature of national development. Up to now, however, the attention to its solicitation in our country's future stability, and any contribution to its advancement, should be the advantage of all. No banking has never permitted its conservative attitude toward home building to lessen.

R. C. STEPHENSON

Practically all banks now accept savings deposits which can well be turned to the advantage of the home builders. The consolidation of individual deposits creates a large amount of finance which is thoroughly responsible and conservative. Necessarily, the aid given in home building is governed by the sound banking rules which have grown out of the years of experience and the constant studies of bank practices.

All of the efforts made to secure investment for small savers are therefore not inconsistent with their customary aim to make it possible to lend large sums for individual home accommodation of mortgage loan borrowers, and the accepting of vast sums on mortgage notes evidence the desire of banks to contribute to the assistance in terms but Jesus those they unify. May we have your presence at 10:30.

When Is Draft Not a Draft? Dr. Hill Tells

"... is a draft not a draft?—that is one of the questions now perplexing the people of the country, and to the lordly, and whose will they cause could?

This is a question every home wife ponders whenever she oil pours her garments in order to air cure them during the summer The answer, according to the National Institute of Thrift, is "Yes."

Dr. E. Vernon Hill.

Dr. E. Vernon Hill, president and one of the most fruitful thinkers of most our contemporaries, answers:

"A draft is a current of air which, by means of its low temperature, has a tendency, or ability, to cool the body, and thus produce a cold. In other words, it is a combination of temperature, pressure and velocity of air that causes the part of the body it comes in contact with to lose heat. Whether a draft is harmful depends upon the temperature of the air, and the amount of moisture it contains. Ordinarily, a draft is not harmful unless the temperature of the air is not so much below the temperature of the body that no heat can be conducted away. Moisture in the air also affects the ability of the air to conduct heat away from the body. Thus, a draft of air which is saturated with moisture is not harmful unless the temperature of the air is below the temperature of the body.

"Drafts are most harmful when they are accompanied by high velocity. Air moving at a high velocity has a greater ability to conduct heat away from the body than air moving at a low velocity. Therefore, a draft of air moving at a high velocity is more harmful than a draft of air moving at a low velocity.

"Drafts are harmful because they cause the body to lose heat more rapidly than it can be replaced by the heat-producing processes of the body. Thus, drafts cause a chilling of the body, which is often followed by a cold.

"Drafts are most harmful when the body is overheated, as when one is perspiring freely. Under such conditions the body loses heat very rapidly by the evaporation of perspiration. Drafts are also harmful when the body is cooled off suddenly, as when one comes out of a warm room into the cold air."

Farm Service by a Bank

A farm service department was inaugurated a year ago by a bank in Georgia, Washington, and a farm service department was established. Co-operation has been maintained with the state college of agriculture service. Work in dairying is carried on in conjunction with the Dairy Herd Improvement Association. Also a pasture contest was held in cooperation with the four banks in the county which offered prizes amounting to $100. Work in poultry was carried on in connection with the Co-operative Poultry Association. Free assistance was given in organizing an economic conference for the South of Surrey growers. The farm advisor of the bank is active in the Agricultural Council of the county composed of farm and other organizations interested in agricultural development, and also in the Farmers' Market. Six hundred farm, business and civic clubs were visited, and talks given farm account books and poultry records. Literature was provided to farmers and banks were helpful in starting some farmers in keeping business records.

Bank Sizes Protected

The pressure through which bank loans are made on real estate is so great as the nature of such an important transaction will permit. When the borrower knows that the bank must have repayment will be made the specified time. Likewise the borrower knows that in no event will the bank disturb the loan on the basis of his repayment ability anticipated. Ability to pay is the basis on which we grant loans, and with farm account books and poultry records now available to farmers and banks have been helpful in starting many farmers in keeping business records.

The Pennsylvania lines announced that tickets will be placed on sale with the opening of the summer season priced at the rate of 2 cents per mile from points south of the Michigan-Indiana state line to all points in northern Michigan.

The tickets will be known as week end tickets, good on all trains, with Pullman car privileges, and from the central point Friday and Saturday each week and for the return trip not later than Wednesday following the date of issue.

DAIRY DELEGATES WILL BE DINNER GUESTS OF COUNTY BANKERS

Delegates to the Charlevoix County Dairy Profits Conference at Boyne City on Tuesday, May 12th, will be guests of the Charlevoix County Bankers' Association, which will pay all expenses of the luncheon.

The association believes that this form of conference will be a splendid means of creating a more profitable dairy industry in the county and also that with town and farm interdependent as they are, it will result in added prosperity for both and uncover a common basis of acquaintance whereby they have been prevented, members of that summer colony.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrews will be "at home" after October 1st, at 219 Vine street, New Britain, Connecticut.

Quarry B. Grant and W. Johnson of Alba were business visitors in Charlevoix Tuesday.

County Agent R. C. Mollenkamp of Boyne City was here Tuesday on business.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. E. Wright of Chicago are at their home on Pine Lake for a few days. They have as a guest Mrs. Clara W. Coudon also of Chicago. All were motor visitors Tuesday for a few hours calling on friends.

Mrs. H. E. Vaupel of Chicago is at Norwood arranging for cottage and placing same on residential rent tenancy in the near future.

Miss Margaret Milner drove up from Detroit last week and spent the week end at the home of Mrs. Pennell by her sister Frances and Miss Alice Partridge, students at Mt. Pleasant Normal. The trio made the return to their respective schools Sunday.

Dr. and Mrs. Russell Palmer returned to St. James Thursday, following a visit of some days in Charlevoix.

Arrangements are being made for the opening of the Belvedere Club which is two weeks earlier than in past years, due probably to fine weather and favorable conditions during the past few weeks.

SOMETHING NEW UNDER SUN: IT'S IN "TEN CENTS A DANCE"

There is always something new under the sun of Hollywood.

With the advent of talking pictures, a small array of song writers —the pick of New York's renowned "tin pan alley"—advanced upon the studios of California's the central to hold theatre songs to feature pictures.

But new something new has come out of Hollywood—a talkie that is based on a song! This unusual romantic screen drama is titled "Ten Cents a Dance" and will start a two day run at the Palace Theater on Saturday. Barbara Stanwyck is the star.

"Ten Cents a Dance" is based upon the popular song of the same name. Before the film was put in production, Lionel Barrymore who directed it stuck upon the novel idea of arranging the scenes and the songs to convey the same type of rhythm as the song possessed. This idea, too, is something new under the sun of Hollywood.

Barbara Stanwyck portrays a pretty dance-hall hostess who finally discovers love among the motley array of men who nightly pay ten cents for the enjoyment of a dance with her.

A superlative cast of players surrounds Miss Stanwyck in unfolding the colorful drama of the dancehalls where blatant jazz bands and forced smiles so often conceal the ache of the blues in hearts that yearn for romance.

THE SKY HAS A FAMILY QUARREL

Four little clouds, way up in the sky,
Four big clouds hurrying by.
Little clouds playing around in the blue;
Big clouds chasing the little clouds too.
Four little clouds in fantastic shapes
Drifting and floating, the sun in their wakes.
Says the big to the little when passing,
"Get out of our way; we own this sky."
Four dark clouds coming out of the west,
Chasing the whiter ones into their nests.
A rain storm is lowering from up in the sky.
Father Wind has got angry and made the clouds cry.
Mother Sun pokes her head out, beaming and gay.
Their troubles forgotten, their tears dried away.
The clouds make their offering, a rainbow on high.
Smiling down on the earth from up in the sky.

The above poem by Albert McMillan, 14 year old local Charlevoix high school student, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. F. F. McMillan, 210 Park Avenue, and was given local recognition by the Detroit Free Press and is a reprint of that paper, Sunday issue of May 3rd. The Free Press for the past four months has carried out a poetry contest in which Michigan students could enter. Young McMillan was one of many entrants, as well as one of the few as compared with the entire number of students, who received special recognition.

Weather indications for May 1st pointed toward favorable conditions for sportsmen who like to "whip" some favorite stream. The day was fine and fishermen were out in force. C.H.S. ORCHESTRA AT TRAVERSE CITY

GIVE CREDITABLE EXHIBITION AT REGIONAL MEET

A comparatively new organization, that of the Charlevoix High School Orchestra appeared at Traverse City last Friday, with other regional orchestras, glee clubs and bands in Class C and although they were not accorded "places" by the judges and committee, due to an unforseen technicality, their appearance on the stage, their performance with instruments, interpretation of music and ensemble instrumentation was highly creditable and resulted in many complimentary notices from those who attended their recital.

The organization is comparatively new and came into existence about three months ago while, as is generally understood, the players are doing their best, under the direction of Mrs. Dan Soule, made not only rapid but wonderful progress. In this the small amount of credit is due Mrs. Soule who has devoted gratis, her time and talent in the development of the several members in the C. H. S. Orchestra and feels amply repaid for her efforts in the demonstration given and most favorably received at the Traverse City contest.

The membership of the orchestra is composed as follows:

First Violin —Gertrude Clark, Winifred Trimble, George La Blanc, Dorothy Partridge.

Second Violin—Albert McMillan, DeVere Bird.

Obligato—Robert Ashton.

Violoncello—Lyla McMillan.

Bass Viol—Lee Shapton

Flute—Marion Tyler.

Oboe—Ruby Superneau.

Drums—Teddy Miller.

Saxophone—Franklyn Rose.

Clarinette—Esther Case.

Piano—Wilma Bellinger.

GRAND TRAVERSE CHERRY FESTIVAL

JULY 15, 16, 17 DATES FOR THE BIG MEET

According to present plans a Grand Traverse Cherry Festival program will be carried out, the fourth annual, on July 15, 16, 17, with more interesting and elaborate features than in the past events and in these there has been a consistent effort to make each succeeding event superior to those of preceding years.

Don C. Weeks, chairman of the committee in charge of the 1931 program, as well as his committee members, enthusiastically boost the project and from present indications are firm in the belief that approximately 150,000 visitors will be present during the 1931 meet. Members of the committee associated with Mr. Weeks are: Mr. Harold Titus, Bill L. Taylor, Jay C. Hall, Leo P. Kalmar, Ezra A. Holliday, M. J. McIntosh and Henry A. Olsen, the latter secretary of the committee.

The Michigan Cherry Growers association, Michigan State Horticultural Society, Michigan Tourist and Resort Association and Traverse City Chamber of Commerce stand sponsors for the event.

Mr. and Mrs. Forrest F. Fowler of Benton Harbor spent the week end with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Fowler. The trip was planned in order that Forrest might visit his favorite trout stream early in the season. This he did and it is reported that he not only had an enjoyable day, but succeeded in taking a nice catch of speckled bawelies for home consumption.

The return trip from Flint was made by motor and she was accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. Roy MacArthur, grand children, Mildred and Bruce MacArthur, and Mrs. Sarah Eckinger, the latter the mother of D. J. Eckinger. The visitors remained here over the week end, returning to Flint Sunday.

CROOK TYPE CHANGES ON AND OFF SCREEN IN "WIDOW FROM CHICAGO"

The popular conception of gunmen and underworld characters as being unkempt and repulsive in appearance has had to be revised to conform with the new school of crooks, according to Earl Baldwin who wrote the screen version of "The Widow from Chicago", the new First National thriller which comes to the Palace Theater beginning next Wednesday.

The modern racketeer is often found to be ultra-scrupulous in his attire; often he is even somewhat refined in appearance, and boasting of a smattering of education which he is always proud to display when he thinks it will impress his associates, according to Baldwin, whose hobby is to know all about such characters.

Dramatists once presented the crook as dirty and unshaven, having beady, shifty eyes and a retreating forehead. This was the stock conception of him for many years before organized crime began to attract a following and more polished type, Baldwin points out. Of course, he adds, the essential characteristics of the criminal remain unchanged!

"The Widow from Chicago" was directed by Edward Cline and has a cast consisting of such notables as Neil Hamilton, Edward G. Robinson, Frank McHugh, Alice White, Lee Shumway, Brooks Benedict, Betty Francisco, E. H. Calvert and others.

The crooks who play so prominent a part in the plot are said to be of the very latest type.

TEACHERS SHOULD OBSERVE THE LAW

Is it possible that the teachers at physical education and health in their concentration upon their expanding, constructive program have forgotten a very important phase of their work? Recently all teachers of physiology and hygiene taught the nature of alcohol and narcotics and their effects upon the human system. In Michigan the law requires such teaching, but in visiting with various teachers and supervisors, I have their admission that this phase of health teaching has been either neglected or forgotten.

In the strain and stress of our modern civilization every child needs not only to develop splendid health habits and to learn about the laws of health, but also to know in a very definite, vivid way, the effects of alcohol and narcotics and dope upon the human body, mind and spirit. If we have neglected this phase of our work, shall we not give it our immediate attention? Let no child be able to say he was not forewarned against all health enemies.

ON BEING A KING

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

"I often wish that I were king.
And then I could do anything."

—A. A. Milne.

The new little chestnuthaired British writer who makes the adventures of Christopher Robin seem almost as real to parents as they were to little Billy, and big enough, too, to charm their pocketbooks, has written a verse which is almost universally applicable to those who are in authority over us. It is applicable to the subjects, being sung in whatever kingdom one finds himself, even though it does not always give one pleasure to do everything one's young slaves. It is not an easy job, and it is not one which allows one a great deal of freedom, this being a king.

I have seen the king of England a few times, and once in Sardinia I ran quite another king, behind St. Moritz, reminded by soothing, during the night conversation things to a newly confident way. They had no freedom, no chance to do as they pleased.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

New York city moreover consists mainly of tall buildings, churches, theaters and parks, but if you have the time you can find lovely country within three hours' motoring distance. There is Long Island, with plenty of beautiful places and splendid roads, which lead clear to Montauk Point. Or there is Westchester. And it is hard to find more attractive country than that which lies along the Connecticut line. Or, if you want a short trip, which also interests me, to the drive to West Point. You can go on and drive down the Hudson and cross the New Hampton bridge, but I like to cross on one of the ferries and go up the west side. We used to go through Englewood, where Dwight Morrow lives, but now we like the river road which runs close to the face of the palisades. After a while you come to that place where there is a sign of graveyard and a swamp of dandy freighters which one time did in the old days. Then you get out with rust and lying so close to each other that you could step from one to another. I always have thought that this monstrous Sargasso sea would make a great setting for a mystery novel.

A reporting lawyer in New York was interviewing by a friend in the office of a young fella charged with burglary, the friend insisting that the accused man was innocent. Finally persuaded to take the case, the lawyer won an acquittal, and charged nothing for his services. The young fellow was extremely grateful and used to drop into the lawyer's office every now in a while, apparently to show that his gratitude was lasting. One night the lawyer's home was entered and his wife lost a valuable fur coat. The next time he saw his former client, he happened to mention the matter. The young man was much interested and asked many questions. About three days later he came to again and said:

"I think there is a chance I have located your wife's coat, but she will have to identify it and then agree to forget where it was found."

The lawyer didn't like this idea, but he told his wife about it, and she certainly wanted the coat back. So she went with the young man to a place

Red Squill Now Popular Poison

Effective Powder in Control of Rats Does Not Harm Other Animals.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

An extensive rural and prairie wolf along the Mediterranean coast pro from the drastic use made of it when it is called red squill, and it produces those toxic that are made from the red squill powder that has proved so effective in killing rats. Squill Powders in Rat Control.

Red squill first came known to the public in connection with rats in 1927, when the Department of Agriculture issued a warning against the use of squill powder that has proved so effective in killing rats. Since then it has been widely used in the control of rats and mice, and has proved very effective in destroying these animals. Red squill powder is made from the bulbs of a wild plant of the Mediterranean region. It is a powder that is harmless to human beings and to most animals, but is deadly to rats and mice. It is a powder that is harmless to human beings and to most animals, but is deadly to rats and mice. Preparing Baits.

Most farmers who use the squill powder mix it with a moistened bait, and squill powder is mixed with the bait at the time of the operation. The most common method of preparing red squill powder for poisoning rats is to mix it with a moistened bait, and squill powder is mixed with the bait at the time of the operation. Beards Once Required Among Army Officers

San Antonio, Texas—Despite their razor-inspired shaving officers of the United States army have not always been clean-shaven. Up to 1832 beards were required of officers, and the old army regulations prescribed that "officers in reporting and taking leave will present themselves clean shaven, with hair cut and dressed in a neat and proper manner."

POULTRY

CULLING POULTRY IS QUITE SIMPLE

Consider Four Points When Picking Out Loafers.

There is no mystery about culling poultry. It is quite simply a thing done in the summer when the changes in the looks of the birds as they are gradually moulting from their summer plumage.

"Young," says W. E. Dougherty, poultryman of the North Carolina state college, "consider the condition of the feathers. If they are worn, ragged and dirty, it is because the bird is a worker, and a good one. If working hens in the keeper have the feathers of the best kept will be in good condition. They will be neat and well kept because she is a good worker. Moreover, she should have a well kept look under comparison. Comparative conditions make it possible to produce a poultry that is harmless to humans. He pointed out that the hen that is laying eggs does not properly undergo the moulting process. Because of the fact that the hen is laying eggs, she does not properly undergo the moulting process. Because of the fact that the hen is laying eggs, she does not properly undergo the moulting process.

Poultry in Confinement Thrived Unusually Well

Bloomington—Range does not necessarily appear to be a requirement for chickens, experiments this winter have shown. Poultry in confinement thrived unusually well, the three pens of 100 pullets each, which were kept in the confinement last year. The first lot had free access to the range and the second lot was confined to the pens. The third lot had access to a pen about twice the size of the other pens. The pullets in this pen were kept in a pen about twice the size of the other pens. The pullets in this pen were kept in a pen about twice the size of the other pens.

Baby Chicks Double in Size in First Few Days

Baby chicks are a lot of growing in the first four weeks of their lives. A recent experiment conducted in the United States Department of Agriculture poultry plant showed that in the first two weeks Nat matched with a mash of ground grains and meat scraps in his feed and the chicks in this pen got the right kind of a start.

Proper conditions for success in rearing baby chicks, Mr. Shrader explains, are a clean, dry brooder house and room to scatter the feeding chicks, so that they will not crowd around the feed hopper for each one scratch. At the end of three weeks another hopper should be added.

Start for Hens

Be careful about starting hens through the summer in an over-fat condition. The first days of the summer hen from heat is due to overfeeding. The hen should be getting equal parts of grain and mash at this time of the year. If you do not have access to plenty of green feed, cut down the grain ration and feed more mash. Keep plenty of fresh water before the hens. Remember that chickens like fresh water and that a summer member as well as plenty of shade.

Proper Care and Feed for Very Young Geese

Do not feed your gosslings for the first 24 hours after they are hatched. They must be fed often and only a little at a time. Their food used to feed adult fed is a mixture of bran and middlings with a small amount of very fine young grain. If fed on the plain or brown it is well to add a little sour milk. Never feed sour milk to young geese.

Alfalfa Important

The fact is that alfalfa is such an important hay crop that its dry stock farmer cannot afford to be without it. No man who doesn't make an effort to get his land in condition to produce it is going to succeed. Alfalfa is losing a real opportunity to reduce material-ly his cost of milk production.

There is comparatively little danger of winter killing when a sandy soil of alfalfa is grown and the land on which it is seeded is level.

Produce Good Eggs

All eggs are about the same quality when first laid. However, if they are to retain this quality and reach the buyer in good condition, proper care is necessary. One of the most important steps in this direction at this season of the year is to remove all the cockerels from the flock. They infertile eggs keep well during the summer.

Another important step is not to gather them too often. The less you handle them the better they will keep. Gather them twice daily, and keep them in a cool, dry place.

Milk in Ration

If a considerable supply of sour milk, skim milk or buttermilk can be had it is profitable to the young chicks to drink the drink milk may be omitted from the mash mixture. If it is not omitted, the ration may supply the mash protein which is an unnecessary expense. An excess of protein should be avoided because it constitutes a heavy tax on the digestive system.

Milk is intended to mix with the mash when sour milk is procured as in many cases.

Separate Cockerels

It will pay to separate young cockerels from the pullets when eight to ten weeks of age. This will give the pullets a chance for better development, and enable the cockerels to fatten the cockerels for market. Time and labor will be saved by keeping the cockerels from the growing chicks after five weeks of age. Put the grain and mash hoppers out on the range and increase a maximum of exercise. Keep the chicks out in the sunshine for vigor and vitality.

To Increase Egg Output Eliminate Broody Fowls

Not enough attention to the broody hen problem is given by the average poultryman.

This neglect is one of the reasons for low egg production of eggs by some flocks during the spring, parents not

He smiled ruefully. His modesty would not let him believe that he had in him the qualities to win the woman he wanted to such joy. What had he on offer but an unyielding mind she would find in the house of their life together dusty opening to dear delights and windows looking upon the world with the promise of new adventure?

The young man carried away with him a good deal to think about. He had learned that he was still such a fatuous ass to love. It would be time enough to forget her when he knew what other fool's errand she was on. A fatal short trip which always interests me, to the drive to West Point. You can go on and drive down the Hudson and cross the New Hampton bridge, but I like to cross on one of the ferries and go up the west side. We used to go through Englewood, where Dwight Morrow lives, but now we like the river road which runs close to the face of the palisades. After a while you come to that place where there is a sign of graveyard and a swamp of dandy freighters which one time did in the old days. Then you get out with rust and lying so close to each other that you could step from one to another. I always have thought that this monstrous Sargasso sea would make a great setting for a mystery novel.

A reporting lawyer in New York was interviewing by a friend in the office of a young fella charged with burglary, the friend insisting that the accused man was innocent. Finally persuaded to take the case, the lawyer won an acquittal, and charged nothing for his services. The young fellow was extremely grateful and used to drop into the lawyer's office every now in a while, apparently to show that his gratitude was lasting. One night the lawyer's home was entered and his wife lost a valuable fur coat. The next time he saw his former client, he happened to mention the matter. The young man was much interested and asked many questions. About three days later he came to again and said:

"I think there is a chance I have located your wife's coat, but she will have to identify it and then agree to forget where it was found."

The lawyer didn't like this idea, but he told his wife about it, and she certainly wanted the coat back. So she went with the young man to a place

Short. The wind's fortune more like that of the Mill Pole recently better than any of the others.

"Which way did you ride?" asked Gillars, still pausing over the others' objections as he carefully selected an engaging all over the country looking for him. Until we get a pretty strong clew I'm not going to ride around chasing down every rumor we hear. When I follow a trail I want it to be a hot one."

"Are you sheriff to convince Gotrell's party? or to run 'em down an' when we get 'em?"

"To restore them if I can. We want to get them back to Cheyenne, along. Of course we think of them, safe Joe?"

"Don't know him very well, but he's got a good rep. Fingers Appleton. I've heard some officers speak well of him."

"I've thought of Anne Gavin, too," Nomad said. He tried to be right friendly with Bob, though.

"Ah, did you now? I, for that matter. If Gerry throws in with us both go through."

"I reckon."

They discussed others as possibilities for any posse that might be required, though both of them realized that the amount of available material to be had in Cheyenne to be determined by the men available at the time.

Quantrell did not keep them waiting long. A hackaway street brought up at the door. Gillars met a couple of horses and took them to the stable. Then he and Nomad went to the house to see Mrs. Ferril. She received them in the Mat Hale in the western part of the county. Mrs. Ferril showed a poise and reticence that Gillars found admirable in a woman. Her self-possession never flinched.

Mrs. Ferril showed strong mind and a very deep daughter. Tears were enough a calm that her. Never saw such a woman for self-control.

"He's certainly got the touch on us this time," the sheriff admitted. "We need more had a sound rule for he knew. Couldn't been gone from the cave. The fire hadn't had time to get down to coals."

"Did you go do now?"

"Went back to the Circle S it near as I could find it. Then we struck out for the cave. The posse had gone. Of course they had to ride single file. Only to keep up a semblance of trail. Couldn't do more than that. The snow was deep in the arroyo. We had to dismount and lead our horses. Then we struck the rocks and had to hunt for the trail. Finally we found it. Then we came on to

TO OUR MOTHERS

Pleasant evidence of the popularity of American mothers is contained in a recent report by the Department of Commerce concerning the effect of "Mother's Day" on the sales of candy. National statistics collected by the department show that candy sales jumped twenty per cent last year during the week preceding that holiday, to be celebrated this year on May 10th. Mother's Day, it appears, sends more candy to the candy counter than any other holiday except Christmas and Easter.

The tens of sweets personally presented by mothers or administered by the children's whistle are the best answer to the cynics who declare that the mothers of this generation are not holding the love and respect of their children. These same tokens of affection are also a delightful and constructive reply to certain modern schools of psychology which are advocating a more detached attitude between mothers and children. The deep love and reverence which finds its expression in verbal and material greetings on Mother's Day is testimony to the sound and unbreakable bond between them.

Modern mothers may be gray-haired and bespectacled from bridge and golf. They may do less cooing over their babies, but the tenderness of motherhood is theirs as it was their own mothers. A few women may lack the veneration they have been callous and indifferent to their maternal duties and pleasures, but in this day as in all others, a mother is the most influential factor in a child's life.

So let us be high with candy and flowers, and let's write poems in her praise on Mother's Day. Her unselfishness and, sacrificial spirit have made her worthy of all we can do and give, and her love will follow us around the world, the one proof of an abiding faith and a constant affection.

SOAKING THE PUBLIC

Ex-president Coolidge, in his daily writings, propounds some hard questions for the politicians to answer. He recently pointed out the simple fact that when Congress passes laws for spending money, the people have to pay for them. Also, when Congress creates a deficit, the people pay, not the men who pass the laws.

The smaller the income and the smaller the income, the harder the tax load hits it. The small earner and the small business, in paying rent and buying supplies, are charged with all the taxes that accumulate on land and manufactured goods.
